The great fire in the City of Boston continues to be the one absorbing topic of interest, not only in this City, but all over the country. Our resident correspondent in the desolated city, aided by an additional staff dispatched from this office, now send us further and interesting details of the conflagration, from which our readers will be able to gather a clear idea of the manner in which Boston sustains herself in her trial. The narratives already published in the regular and extra editions of the TIMES during Sunday and Monday were so graphic and complete as to excite comment among all classes. The utmost care was exercised in preparing these daily narratives of the scenes transpiring in Boston, while the chapters with which we furnished the details has been duly appreciated by the business community. Yesterday the TIMES published as full a list of the sufferers and their losses as will probably ever be obtained, occupying over six columns of our paper, and so eager was the demand that we were compelled to print a very large edition, all of which was exhausted at an early hour yesterday morning. The sale of the TIMES Extra yesterday reached over 24,000 copies.

AFTER THE FIRE.

Reports From our Regular and Special Correspondents—Interesting Narrative of Current Events—Scenes and Incidents.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BOSTON, Mass., Nov. 11.—After forty-eight hours of intense anxiety, wild commotion, and scenes of almost indescribable destruction, the city has returned to nearly its normal state, save in the burnt district, where the ruins still smolder, and will remain for some time sorrowful monuments of the ruin a night has wrought. The stranger arriving in Boston this afternoon, and keeping in that portion of the city west and north of Tremont-street, would not know, from anything he saw or heard, that a great calamity had befallen the city, and it is through this portion of the city that strangers not interested in certain special features of wholesale trade usually go. The flow of life remained uninterrupted in all the social arteries. The marts of trade, wholesale and retail, in parts of the city remote from the blackened waste had much their usual appearance. It is not meant that the city had, even in its perfect portions, retained its usual aspect, but only to assert that Boston, although scarred deeply, is not destroyed, and that her people are not cast down. Yet it is undoubtedly true that the city has been visited by a calamity rarely paralleled in the history of ravages by fire.

EXTENT OF THE DISASTER.

Previous dispatches have informed the readers of the TIMES fully as to the progress of this disaster, but it was not until today that its exact extent could be clearly ascertained and precisely stated. It is now found that the burnt district comprises within a fraction of sixty acres, or 2,610,000 square feet, one half of which should be deducted for streets and areas, leaving 1,305,000 square feet, which on Saturday were covered with the most massive and magnificent business structures in America, and which now present only the smoking, shapeless ruins of what was apparently indestructible. In laying waste so much of what was supposed to be unassailable by fire or the element, the fire, beginning at the corner of Summer and Kingston streets, in one of the newest and best of these great granite buildings, ate its way through iron and granite to the north, five blocks; north-east, two blocks; south, one block; south-east, four blocks, and to the destroyed, six blocks. That the reader may have a different knowledge of the extent of this calamity, let him take a map of the city and follow the course of Summer and Kingston-street, beginning at the corner of Washington-street and Avon-place, thence down Avon-place to Chauncey-street, thence on Chauncey-street to Bedford-street, on Bedford to Bateman, down Bateman to Broad, along Broad to the harbor, along the harbor to Russia wharf, from Russia wharf to Batterymarch-street, along Batterymarch to Kilby, about Kilby to State, up State to Devonshire, down Devonshire to Milk, up Milk to Washington, and along Washington to Avon-place, the starting-point. By thus following around the edge of the ravaged district, and by keeping in mind the facts previously stated, an idea can be obtained both of the location and extent of the fire, which is extremely difficult to convey in a city like this, where each street stares you in the face which ever way you turn. Compared with the whole extent of Boston, or even with its business portion, it appears somewhat insignificant, yet it is undeniable that the heart of the city has been eaten out. In its extent, therefore, as in its commercial aspect, which is fully treated further on, the disaster is not so vast as the first accounts seemed to portend, and certainly not so great as the conflicting reports gathered up outside the city, during the stoppage of telegraphic communication for a short time last night, seemed to threaten. The business world can be assured, if such an assurance is needed, that Boston is only a little shaken, somewhat incommoded for a few weeks, threatened, perhaps, with an inconsiderable number of individual failures, and some of her wealthy real estate owners put to much trouble and great expense; but beyond this there is nothing alarming. In no sense is the city paralyzed, even for a week, much less destroyed or threatened with destruction.

ABOUT THE ORIGIN OF THE FIRE.

It appears even yet impossible to obtain a statement history of how this disaster overtook the city. How it originated is not known definitely, although it is not disputed that it was first discovered in the engine-room of the premises Nos. 67, 69 and 71 Summer-street, where it had probably sprung from overheating or other accidental cause. Running up the elevator, the flames soon crowned the great building with a ball of fire from the vast timber-box, commonly known as a Mansard roof, with which it was surmounted. The fire from this roof naturally and swiftly leaped to others, until there was apparently a great belt of fire stretched in mid-sky above the city, giving force to the remark of Chief-Engineer Damrell before the Citizens' Committee that he could not say what would happen so long as architects were permitted to build houses of enormous height and pile lumber yards on top of them. Here was the cause beyond all doubt of the great disaster, for not even granite and iron could bear up against this vast sea of fire above them. They melted away, and only the ruins remain to tell of the folly to which they were due. So much, then, is known, and it is known, too, in a general way, that the fire was finally stayed by the blowing-up of buildings; but beyond this there is only a huge mass of details that would only serve to confuse the reader.

THE SECOND FIRE.

The fire was fought as fires usually are, was finally got under control, and then broke out again soon after midnight, when the anticipated dangers from gas explosions came upon the city. The air having got to the supply pipes in the stores of W. R. Storms & Co. and R. S. Stern & Co., between Smith's and Shreve, Crump & Lowe's, at the upper end of Summer-street, fire communicated with the pipe and also with the escaped gas within the building, and a terrific explosion took place, which knocked out the front wall and set the building on fire in many places. An alarm was struck, followed immediately by a second and third. Firemen hastened hither as fast as possible, and a detachment of cavalry and infantry were sent to guard against the danger to those who flocked to the scene. The explosions were now momentary and terrific. One of these explosions blew the windows out of the building occupied by Shreve, Crump & Lowe, on Washington-street, causing a "stampede" among the bystanders, and imperiling hundreds of lives. On both sides, front and rear, of the building where the explosions took place, the fire was roaring with a mad fury, and it was feared would soon penetrate through to Shreve, Crump & Lowe's large jewelry establishment, and extend downward to Hovey's great dry-goods store below, although a score of streams from the steamers were thrown upon the flames. The Park House was close in the rear of the burning building, while Jordan, Marsh & Co.'s retail store, an immense structure, stood only forty feet distant from the hotel of the fire. Just at this point the efforts of the firemen seemed to be concentrated, in order, if possible, to save the building, which, if it caught fire, must endanger the whole of Washington-street in that vicinity, for just opposite are very tall granite-fronted buildings, filled with combustibles which would make an immense fire.

PANIC-STRICKEN PEOPLE.

All the people occupying buildings on Avon-street were promptly ordered by the firemen and police, first, to extinguish the gas, and then to vacate their houses as soon as possible, as explosions similar to the one in Summer-street and elsewhere, were liable to occur. At this time the flames from the rear of the burning buildings were carried over the Park House, in Central Court, and threatened to communicate with the immense building of Messrs. Jordan, Marsh & Co. The people in Avon-place and Bedford-street, Temple-place and Suffolk-place, were flying in every direction. Women were frantic with fright, and hurried out into the streets half clad, and their arms filled with clothing.

PAINFUL INCIDENTS.

A number of families in Avon-street were thus hastily driven from their homes, and forced to seek refuge elsewhere. These scenes, made more terrible by the horrors to which the city had been previously subjected, were accompanied with some heart-rending incidents. The first explosion of gas was heard by Mrs. Martha Hudson and her aged mother, who resided in Summer-street. Mrs. M. Hudson rushed to one of the second-story windows in the building in which she had lived, and called in cries of anguish for assistance. As none seemed to be at hand she jumped to the pavement. Mrs. Hudson was severely burned about the legs, and was taken to the Second Station, where she was attended by a surgeon. The mother of Mrs. Hudson undoubtedly perished in the building, as she was not seen to escape. A lady and an infant were rescued from the fourth story of an endangered building in Summer-street by the firemen, who put up their long ladders just in time to prevent the woman from leaping into the street. She and the babe were hurried from the dangerous locality and taken to a residence in the southern portion of the City.

THE GAS SHUT OFF.

An end came to these thrilling scenes about 1½ A. M., when the gas was shut off throughout the city to prevent any further explosions. There was a delay between this probable cutting off of the gas supply, and had provided themselves with candles, were able to continue work, and in the newspaper offices hundreds of candles were brought into requisition. The telegraph offices were obliged to close for want of light at 1:30 A. M., and hence the impression was conveyed to distant points that the second disaster was much more serious than was really the case.

PROGRESS OF THE FIRE.

But the fire was by no means extinguished with the cutting off of the gas, as it continued its rage until nearly 3 o'clock before it was under control. At the corner of Summer and Washington-streets, the store of Shreve, Crump & Lowe was burned entirely as far down as the Chauncey-street to Bedford-street, on Bedford to Summer, down Summer to Broad, along Broad to the harbor, along the harbor to Russia wharf, from Russia wharf to Batterymarch-street, along Batterymarch to Kilby, about Kilby to State, up State to Devonshire, down Devonshire to Milk, up Milk to Washington, and along Washington to Avon-place, the starting-point. By thus following around the edge of the ravaged district, and by keeping in mind the facts previously stated, an idea can be obtained both of the location and extent of the fire, which is extremely difficult to convey in a city like hoped it would escape destruction. Out beyond this, on Chauncey-street, is Mudge's Building, a fine granite structure, occupied by Lawton, Coleman & Co. This has granite facings to the windows, iron cornice, and an iron roof, well tinned, which effectually resisted the flames. Here the fire was finally stayed, and it has not since broken out.

EXTENT OF THE SECOND FIRE.

The area of this new fire adjoins that of the first, and is included in the disastrous and boundless wreck have been mentioned. It was, in fact, but a continuation of the first disaster, and, although at one time threatening more serious consequences than the first, it was but the last fitful flash of the great conflagration.

THE MIRROR OF STATISTICS.

It is difficult for the merchants of this city to form a just estimate of their losses, or to determine what will be the effect on their future business. On the first reports, when it appeared the amount of property consumed was more than double the value of the actual loss, a feeling of extreme despondency prevailed. This, however, has in a great measure passed away as the merchants realize their true situation. I have seen today several representatives of each of the three great lines of trade affected, and from what they say am forced to believe that the embarrassment to the commercial community throughout the country by this disaster will be but temporary. The men engaged in the wholesale dry-goods business are perhaps the largest sufferers, and on Sunday morning there were these among them who thought that the destruction of their business places would necessitate the transfer of the offices of the manufacturing companies for which they were agents, to their branch houses in New-York City, and that, should the trade once more set in that direction from the West, it would be difficult to get it back to this city again. In this, however, they have been saved by two previous events, one the burning of Chicago, and the other the late horse disease. The latter was of so serious a type here that it did not allow the large manufacturing companies at Lowell, Lawrence, and other places, to ship goods to their agencies to any great extent, and thus the supply on hand in the large dry-goods establishments in Boston at the time the fire broke out was much smaller than usual.

GOING TO WORK AGAIN.

The example of enterprise displayed by Chicago merchants after their fire, in making the best of their misfortune, has given to the business community here a vitality very different from their ordinary conservative habits. This evening's papers are full of advertisements of leading houses, stating that they have obtained stores elsewhere, and have supplies of goods ready to serve Western and home buyers. All over the burnt district there are pasted little stakes with boards, on which are printed the new addresses of the firms who lately occupied the sites. All day long teams were busy trucking new supplies of goods to these new places, and as there is a large quantity on hand at most of the woolen and cotton mills within a radius of 100 miles of this place, in a week's time they will be almost the same in this respect as they were three days ago.

THE BOOT AND SHOE MERCHANTS.

With the boot and shoe houses, who were, in the aggregate, the next largest sufferers, the result has been much the same. Hardly a firm engaged in this business has escaped injury, and most of them have suffered to the extent of losing the entire stock in their warehouses. These are, at the most, hardly more than points of distribution for the thousands of small boot and shoe manufacturers scattered over Eastern Massachusetts, from Lynn to Cohasset. These men have all moved into other buildings, and will in a few days more be plentifully supplied with stock.

THE WOOL TRADE.

The men engaged in the wool trade will feel the loss more severely. It is estimated that there were about 5,000,000 pounds of wool destroyed, and should the companies with whom it is insured not be able to pay, the loss will fall directly on the holders, who either own it outright or have advanced large amounts on it to Western owners. These merchants are, as a general thing, men of wealth, though in many cases the loss will fall on them with great severity.

OTHER TRADES.

In other lines of trade the losses, though large in individual instances, are not so in the aggregate. Paper and hardware dealers to the number of eight or ten are on the list of sufferers, and in their cases the loss will be to a considerable extent personal.

THE REAL ESTATE OWNERS.

The great burden of injury done by the fire is to be borne, however, by the owners of real estate and the insurance companies, the ratio of loss falling to either depending on the ability of the underwriters to meet their policies. The owners of the buildings and building lots in this section of the city are, with hardly an exception, wealthy persons, and the loss to them, even should the companies pay no more than fifty cents on a dollar, will be merely in the form of a reduction of income, and will not be attended with that personal suffering which usually lends additional terror to a disaster of this kind.

REBUILDING.

All these owners express their intention to build as soon as men can be got to work, and a guarantee for this can be found in the activity exhibited by them at present. Men are busily employed clearing the streets of the blocks of granite, brick, beams, and other débris, and in several instances, notably at the Transcript building, work has already been begun, and will be carried on with the utmost speed until the establishment is again in working order.

ESTIMATING THE LOSS.

Concerning the total loss, there are several statements by careful calculators. The closest estimates fix it at $50,000,000 as the minimum, and $100,000,000 as the maximum. The Chairman of the Board of Assessors, Mr. Thos. Hills, who is regarded as trustworthy authority, makes the following and the lowest statement: The total valuation of Ward 5, Part 2, that is that part of the ward that lies north of Summer-street, east of Washington-street, and south of Milk-street, for real estate, is $27,250,000. Assume this amount to be the valuation of the burnt district in this ward, which is an overestimate, as the value of the estates that escaped the fire in the second part of this Ward considerably exceed the value of those south of Summer-street, which were destroyed, the value of the buildings in this district is at nearly as many as one-third of the value of the estates. This would put the value of the buildings destroyed in Ward Five at $18,166,666. The assessed valuation of the personal property of Ward Five, Part Two, is $18,766,666, which is assessed as the value of the personal property of that part of the ward swept by the fire, which is again an over estimate, as the assessed property destroyed south of Summer-street is more than offset by that remaining unconsumed in the vicinity of Broad, Purchase, and India streets. This gives as the value of the personal property of residents and firms doing business in the district, $12,511,066; add for the personal property of persons doing business in the district, but who, having no premises and insured in the wards of the city where they reside, say $2,000,000; add for goods consigned for sale, not assessable in Boston, being taxable to the consignor in the place of his residence, and for household goods exempt by law, say $3,500,000. This put this total estimated value of the property destroyed in the Fifth Ward at $31,261,000. Add for buildings destroyed in the Fourth Ward, viz., assessed valuation, $1,000,000, and for the personal property of this Ward, estimated as above, $2,000,000; total, $4,000,000. And also for the portion of this season of the year the stocks held by our merchants are considerably above the average; the time allow say $12,000,000; deduct amount of goods saved, say $3,000,000, leaving $10,000,000. Estimated total loss, $65,000,000.

ANOTHER ESTIMATE.

The Chairman of the Board of Street Commissioners estimates the actual loss at $50,000,000, and places it out in the wind. About 1,305,000 feet of buildings were burned; the value of these, at $15 per foot, not a large average, is $19,575,000; and three times this for the value of the stock, $58,725,000. Other gentlemen, however, conversant with merchandise, and the business which was doing in the fire district estimate the value of the goods destroyed at $40,000,000, many millions having been removed to places of safety. But the loss on the buildings is believed to be greater than either of these gentlemen estimate it.

A CORRECTION.

The report that the building occupied by the American Watch Company of Waltham, No. 9 Summer-street, Boston, was destroyed by the fire was incorrect, I find. The building and all its contents were saved, and it is the only building left standing on the block.

COMPARATIVE TOSSES.

The heaviest losers are probably the dry goods jobbers. The entire boot and shoe trade in the city suffers heavily in the loss of everything, with the exception of one small house on Hanover-street, in the city, but nevertheless their loss in the aggregate is more likely to reach quite as high a figure as that of the dry goods people. The latter had larger stocks in store, as a general thing, than the former, and of more value. A considerable portion of the leather firms sold on sample, and occupied office room merely, and it was not a general custom with any of them to keep very large stocks on hand. Nevertheless the aggregate quantity of leather in store was large, and the loss to the leather interest is accordingly great.

THE BANKS.

The only national banks that did not settle at the Clearing-house this morning were the Bank of North America, vault under the ruins; Shawmut Bank, vault under the ruins, and Freemens' Bank, vault broken through by falling walls and contents destroyed. The Mount Vernon, Everett, Hide and Leather, and Revere Banks settled their accounts as usual, having cleared their vaults of valuables before the fire reached their locality. The Bank of North America will probably not be able to reach its vault for two days.

THE INSURANCE COMPANIES.

The Boston insurance companies put on a commendably courageous front. Their condition is critical, but they promise to make a good pull through. All have heavy risks, the custom having been with the majority of the crippled houses to insure in home offices. The actual losses of each insurance company cannot at this writing be given. The officials generally are reluctant to give much information, and some few of them have not yet recovered from the first shock sufficiently to comprehend the extent and the boundaries of their losses. The heaviest loser is supposed to be the North American. Its risks amounted to $900,000 in the district burnt. What the company will pay their officers will not state; but it is said to be the effort to be prepared to meet 50 per cent. The City loses $600,000. It is now supposed that the averages of payments will be about fifty per cent. A few may go higher, and none now speak of falling under twenty per cent.

THE SAVINGS BANKS.

There has been considerable inquiry in regard to the supposed effect of the fire upon the financial condition of the savings banks of the city, and many depositors alarmed at their own fears have caused a slight run on nearly all of the institutions here. The result of extensive investigations is that the standing of these banks has not been affected, inasmuch as the value of the land in the burned district more than covers the mortgages which were held by them on the property destroyed.

BOSTON INSURANCE COMPANIES.

Twenty-five Months Past Due.—It is positively known that the Massachusetts, New-England, Mutual, and India Insurance Companies can pay their entire loss without additional assessments upon their stockholders. A number of others, perhaps a third of the whole list, will pay every dollar by means of assessments, while the remainder are hopelessly involved, and may make a small proportionate payment and dissolve, or continue on an entirely new basis.

AID FOR REBUILDING.

A meeting was held this afternoon, at the City Hall, by the Common Council, at which the following proposition was urged, with strong probability of being agreed to, at a meeting to be held to-morrow: It was that an extra session of the Massachusetts Legislature should be called, and that they should so amend the charter of the City of Boston as to allow it to issue its bonds to the extent of twenty millions to the real estate owners whose property has been burned, on the condition that they shall build immediately, and taking a mortgage on the property as a security. The plan seems to meet with great favor from all business men, and, indeed, from the community at large. The appeal is made with some force, as it is a matter of local pride that the business interests of the place should not by any delay in rebuilding be transferred to any of the rival cities.

A BANK SAFE DESTROYED.

The Freemen's Bank is about the only banking institution that has suffered serious loss. The safe of this institution while the fire was in progress, dropped some distance to the ground, and the other portion was broken in such a way that the fire obtained entrance and destroyed the entire contents. These were entirely deposits of private individuals, placed there for safe-keeping, and amounted to over a million of dollars. The bonds and specie of the bank was in the inner vault, and escaped injury.

WHAT STAYED THE FLAMES—THE POST-OFFICE.

The rear of the Post-office building was entirely destroyed, it having been blown up by gunpowder. It was this that stayed the flames and prevented them from reaching State-street, otherwise the entire northern portion of the city might have been laid in ashes. As it is, the building is entirely useless for business purposes, and the Post-office is now located in Faneuil Hall, though, owing to the difficulty in distributing matter, no mails have been delivered today to private individuals.

THE GOVERNMENT FUNDS SAFE.

The United States Sub-Treasury, which was situated in the hall over the Post-office, was also destroyed, but the specie and bonds, to the amount of about $12,000,000, were stored in the vaults under the building, and was not removed until today, when it was taken to the Custom-house under a guard of marines. During the day the city has been in the hands of the police, assisted by several regiments of militia and a detachment of regular troops. The marshal-in-chief has been roused off, and a guard stationed at each street leading to it, allowing no one to go in whose business was not plainly apparent. To-night, however, the troops have full possession. Martial law is maintained in that district, and it is only with the greatest difficulty that any one can obtain entrance into the precinct even with the passes required by the regulations. With the second night of this great disaster singular stories have come to the child city of the Fortune. There is no longer the war of flames, the crash of falling timbers, and the glare of a sea of fire illuming all the city. Instead of this there is the clang of sabres, the tramp of soldiers mounting guard around the burnt district, and darkness everywhere beyond its limits, except where the moon dispels out of doors, and candles within, for the city has no gas. The works are not injured nor are the mains disturbed except in the burnt district, but the gas has been cut off only as a precaution against any repetition of the explosion of last night, to which the second fire was due.

THE CITY QUIET AND ORDERLY.

Great inconvenience has resulted from this fact to the hotels, newspapers offices, and places of public resort; but it is borne without repining. The great distinguishing trait of the city to-night is its perfect equanimity, its profound quiet. The satisfactory absence of all disorder, which may be due to the admirable arrangements of Gen. Burrell, commanding the military, and Chief of Police Savage, for it is known that desperate characters have flocked here from all neighboring cities, but especially from New-York. During the day tens of thousands of those who came from the five of curiosity alone, poured into the city on all the trains, and Tremont-street in the neighborhood of the ravaged territory was densely packed with slowly moving masses, but tonight that thoroughfare is even more deserted than usual, as nearly all the strangers have left the city. The citizens, worn out by the excitement and labors of the past few days, have in great part retired to their homes for the rest they so much need.

THE SCENE AT NIGHT.

The burned district to-night presents a weird aspect, as scattered over its surface, amid the ruins, are hundreds of smoldering fires which give forth a glare that lights up all the scene. Standing in the centre of the district the observer sees only a few remnants of upright walls, here and there, and the ground surface seems only a waste of fire. Seeing this without limit in the dim, uncertain light, he can hardly believe he is not in the midst of that awful desolation he has been taught is to come with the wreck of worlds. This is the scene to-night, but with daybreak will come hundreds of workmen, as there have been this afternoon, digging in the hot ruins for safes, putting up placards on these tottering walls, announcing where the men who lately did business within them can be found, and everywhere will be also the pluck and energy that save the fire such splendid food, and which will speedily leave the site of these ruins with buildings as good as those which have been destroyed. There might be columns of incidents sent showing all this, showing how the city has never lost its composure, and is even now preparing to lift herself from her ashes, but Warning has come from Gen. Eckert, Superintendent of the Telegraph, who has done his utmost to accommodate the public, that the wires are crowded, beyond their capacity for to-night. It can only be added, therefore, that while this has been called another Chicago disaster it is far different in the amount of immediate misery to individuals, it has caused. Except a few tenements there has hardly been a dwelling destroyed, and consequently there have been no thousands of families driven into the streets seeking a refuge they knew not where to find. This fire has been a blow at business interests rather than at social life, and although many families after a time will feel its effects, there have been and will be here none of those harrowing scenes of human suffering, in consequence of sudden homelessness which made Chicago so terribly dramatic. Havoc has done its worst, to-morrow the work of regeneration will begin in earnest, and Boston afford one more, and not the least, notable example of the fortitude and energy of the American people.

The Condition of Funds in the Sub-Treasury and Bank Vaults—The Post-office Improvements.

BOSTON, Nov. 11.—The funds of the Sub-Treasury were removed from the Exchange to-day to the Custom-house. A file of marines from the Navy-Yard escorted the treasure.

The Post-office is temporarily located in Faneuil Hall. Postmaster Burt does everything possible, under the circumstances, to expedite the distribution of mail matter.

THE BANKS.

The inner safe of the Freeman's Bank, over which there was considerable anxiety, has been opened, and the contents found to be safe. The outer safe fell from the second story and broke a hole in the side, and depositors' trunks, with their valuables, are all destroyed. The bank will probably lose nothing. The vaults of the other banks, with their contents, are safe. The books of the Hide and Leather Bank are, however, destroyed. It is impossible to give anything like an accurate or even approximate report of the insurance. Some of the largest firms have had no time to look over their policies. At an informal meeting of the leading insurance officers today, the statement was made that the losses would be nearly paid in full.

IMPROVEMENTS SUGGESTED.

Propositions are being urged for the making of new street lines on the burnt district, and also for the erection of a Merchants' Exchange building.

A committee has been appointed to ask the General Government to purchase the burned over lots adjoining the new Post-office for enlarging that building; and also to request the Massachusetts Senators and Representatives in Congress to secure the passage of an act of Congress allowing the same drawback on building material as was allowed to Portland and Chicago.

The Committee of Twenty citizens has voted to request Gov. Washburn to call a special session of the Legislature to authorize the City of Boston to issue a sufficient amount of seven per cent. bonds to aid the sufferers in rebuilding the burnt district.

CASUALTIES FEARED.

Joseph Burr, of Dorchester, and George Smith, of Hopedale, came to this city on Saturday evening to see the fire, and have not been seen since. Saturday evening, they were in the vicity of Chauncey-street. It is feared that they have been killed by falling walls.

E. B. Abbott, a Charlestown fireman, is missed by his friends, and fears for his safety are entertained.

DARKNESS.

The city is in darkness to-night, owing to the disconnecting of the main gas-pipes from the burnt district. The publishing and printing of the newspapers, and all other necessary work, is being done to-night by lamp and candle light.

ARRIVAL OF NEW-YORK THIEVES.

The owl train from New-York, due at 4 o'clock this morning, arrived at 7 o'clock with several car loads of roughs and thieves, who cleaned out all the refreshment saloons en route, and committed other robberies and outrages.

THE AUTHORITIES READY FOR THEM.

The military force in Boston will be increased if necessary.

A battalion of cavalry has been added to the military guard of the bursting district which now numbers 1,500 men. Attempts at robbery and incendiarism will be summarily dealt with. The streets are almost impassable from the crowds of people in the vicinity of the fire.

AN INCENDIARY ARRESTED.

The Board of Aldermen on Mansard Roofs.

The Board met at 1 o'clock yesterday, John Cochrane, President, in the chair.

On motion, the Superintendent of Public Buildings was directed not to grant permits for the erection of Mansard roofs upon any building now being erected, or to be erected hereafter, unless the same be constructed of fire-proof material; and to withdraw all permits outstanding and not yet acted upon, unless a clause be inserted covering the desire of the Council, that fire-proof material be used.

The Board then adjourned.

The Boston Fire in New-Jersey.

The losses sustained by Boston merchants will affect the business property of Newark more seriously than was at first supposed. Among the leatheat dealers and harness and trunk manufacturers the loss is more directly felt, for they have large debts outstanding in Boston. The manufacturers of saddlery and coach hardware are also heavily burdened by the calamity. Boston had been one of the best of markets for their articles of manufacture, and its merchants had secured a high credit. The Clark Thread manufactory had an agency in Boston, which was destroyed, and they also had outstanding debts that are expected to prove a total loss. A large amount of stock of Boston companies was also held in Newark. The Newark insurance companies have not suffered to any considerable extent. The heaviest loser is the Citizens', which loses $22,000. Its surplus is $150,000. The jewelry manufacturers are said to be losers to some extent, but none of them are crippled by the losses. In Paterson the heaviest losers are Dale Brothers, silk manufacturers, who have lost $125,000 on stock on hand at their agency in Boston.

EXTRACT FROM INSURANCE SPECTATOR.
The RESOLUTE has had its share of the unfavorable experience and perils which have envloped fire insurance of late years; but the Company's stockholders have never flinched in the determination to maintain the highest credit, and no one who ever held one of the Resolute's policies can say either that he was paid less than 100 cents on the dollar, or that he was the recipient of other than the most high-toned and liberal treatment.

☞ Advertisements for the WEEKLY TIMES must be handed in before 10 o'clock this evening.

The second edition of the TIMES, issued yesterday morning, contained simultaneously with the Boston newspapers a complete list, occupying six columns of small type, of the firms who had suffered from the Boston fire, together with the amount of their losses. We can point to this as a fresh illustration of how completely the organization of our news department has enabled us to distance, in regard to the details of the fire, every other New-York newspaper. It is not our custom, like some of our contemporaries, to indulge in empty vaporings about "enterprise," &c. We prefer to show some of the solid results of vigilant and liberal management, and our news record in connection with the Boston fire may be safely pointed to as a conspicuous illustration of a few of the essential qualities that go to constitute a first-class morning journal.

It is a noteworthy fact that the leading papers of the Republican Party throughout the country have united in urging on Congress prompt attention to civil service reform, and to the consideration of questions of administrative improvement generally. Our amiable friends of the opposition profess to see in this a confession that their course in the recent campaign was justified. We hope their feeling on the subject will be strong enough to lead them to lend all the aid they can to the reforms referred to. The people have decided not to trust them exclusively to Democratic hands, but they have no desire to prevent Democrats from practically helping them. Next to the importance of a heavy Southern vote for a national candidate, which we have just had, would be the hearty co-operation of the Democrats in civil service reform.

A glance at the claims of newspapers for Corporation advertising, disallowed yesterday by the Board of Audit, will show how impudent was the swindling system under which the claims arose. The total amount disallowed was $53,117. Of this amount, the Irish Democrat presented $39,993 10; the Banner of Liberty, $7,778, and the St. Peter, $3,587 60. What would have been done with these claims under the Tammany régime?

When the journalistic incapacity of the New-York Herald has been very conclusively demonstrated, it is safe to predict that it will begin to brag next morning about what it knows of the North Pole and the wilds of Siberia. Being convicted of very complete ignorance of events that were occurring on the shore of Massachusetts Bay, the Herald hastens to assure its readers that its information in regard to the open Polar Sea is always exclusive and trustworthy. As New-York is rather more interested in its own affairs, and in those of neighboring cities, than in the comparative temperature enjoyed by the Esquimaux, the Herald will be likely to discover that its "enterprise" falls wonderfully flat upon a public that is not cosmopolitan enough to think Baffin's Bay of more consequence than Boston.

A silly attempt has been made to make people believe that the firemen of the City have somehow been injured by the refusal of the Finance Department to intrust HENNESSY, HITCHMAN & Co. with funds to be spent entirely at their discretion. If the payment of the firemen was delayed, it was entirely the fault of the Tammany Commissioners, who refused to allow their pay-rolls to be audited in accordance with law. We understand that two out of the five Commissioners entirely disapproved of this refusal, and as the Supreme Court decision was dead against the right of the Fire Board to pay bills not audited by the proper Department, they had no possible excuse for persisting in their opposition to a very plain requirement of law and good government. With men like HENNESSY, HITCHMAN and BRAIN in control of the Fire Department, the liability of a large conflagration in this City assumes new terrors.

THE FIRE AND ITS LESSONS.

The Fire and Its Consequences.

Perhaps the most gratifying feature in connection with the great calamity which has overtaken Boston, and the business interests of the country at large, is the quiet resolution with which the consequences of the disaster have been faced by all whom they immediately affected. The losses resulting from the fire would have been greatly aggravated had the feeling of panic, which a mob of the minor speculators of Wall-street endeavored to promote, communicated itself to the solid business men of the City. We intimated yesterday the probability of sensational journals playing into the hands of a set of unprincipled adventurers in whom national calamity awakens only a carrion-like instinct for prey. The New-York Herald was, of course, the foremost offender, in its reckless exaggeration of the magnitude of the disaster. That remarkable journal seems to have resolved to make up for its ignominious failure to furnish news of the fire on Sunday, by trebling the magnitude of its proportions yesterday. Among the business circles of New-York, there is, fortunately, no lingering superstition in regard either to the accuracy of the Herald's news or the trustworthiness of its opinions. There was, accordingly, no disturbing influence to affect the settled conviction of the arbiters of affairs on Wall-street, that the disaster was one which could be met without serious strain by the financial resources of those immediately affected, and that there was no possible reason why shares and stocks should be "unloaded," with a rapidity which would have involved thousands in ruin.

Much of this settled feeling was due to the prompt and satisfactory assurance, by the Secretary of the Treasury that the Government stood ready to exert its influence against attempts to excite groundless panic and promote a general contagion of distrust. The fluctuations of the leading stocks were, therefore, comparatively slight. It has been reported that the Government will sell today five millions of gold, but, whether this be so or not, it may safely be predicted that yesterday's disturbance of values will be still further repaired by the close of business this afternoon. The action of the Chamber of Commerce has been equally prompt and judicious. In a crisis like the present the rivalries of our commercial centres are forgotten, and the promptings of generous impulse are allowed to determine action which is equally in harmony with the claims of radical identity of interest and the obligations of a common nationality.

It is now ascertained, almost beyond the possibility of doubt, that the absolute loss in stock and buildings, by the Boston fire, will not exceed the estimate given in the TIMES of this morning, viz.: ninety millions of dollars. This represents a fair average of the computations made on the spot by those best able to judge, and the latest indications compel us to believe that the estimate of seventy-five millions made by various competent Boston authorities may be still nearer the truth. So far as can be judged from necessarily imperfect data, the total amount of insurance on buildings and stocks in the burnt district, will be within forty millions of dollars, whose distribution may be roughly summarized as follows:

New-York Companies	$8,000,000
Foreign Companies	6,000,000
Connecticut Companies	3,000,000
Pennsylvania Companies	2,500,000
Massachusetts Companies	16,000,000
Companies in other States	4,500,000
Total	$40,000,000

Let it be assumed that the foreign companies and the Connecticut companies will pay in full. This secures nine millions to the Boston merchants who have suffered from the fire. Then suppose, as seems highly probable, that twenty-five per cent. of deduction all round will cover the loss from failures of Massachusetts companies. This leaves another twelve millions to be paid on risks in the burned district. Then assume that a million and a half, or ten per cent. gross deduction, will cover the failures to pay, among the remaining companies, and we have another thirteen and one-half millions of claims likely to be paid. A computation like this, which is, of course, largely conjectural, would leave thirty-four and one-half millions of dollars to be paid out of insurance to the sufferers by the Boston fire. If the lowest estimate of total loss be the true one, mercantile Boston would lose about forty millions of dollars by the disaster of Sunday. If the higher estimate be correct, the loss would amount to fifty-five millions of dollars. In either case, it is perfectly certain that the loss is not too heavy for Boston to bear, and that she only needs a little timely forbearance and confidence on the part of her creditors to pass through the trying ordeal with comparative ease.

Of this we may be perfectly assured, that nowhere will the practical lessons of the fire be more fully improved than in Boston. The stately buildings, with their massive fronts of Quincy granite, will doubtless rise again after a very brief interval, but the treacherous structures of wood and slate that surmounted the palatial warehouses of Boston will disappear forever. A wrought-iron safe with a plate-glass top would be as correctly termed burglar-proof, as the chief commercial buildings of Boston could be called fire-proof. If the art of man can contrive structures which are actually secure against the ravages of flame, it is perfectly certain that Boston will now have them.

Several important facts have been made clear by the Boston fire, and the lesson taught by them should be made use of in New-York without one hour of needless delay. When Chicago was burned, the common saying was that the vastness of the calamity was due entirely to the unusually inflammable nature of most of the houses. But now, in Boston, whole streets and squares of granite buildings, filled in the most solid manner, and called "fire-proof," have been crumbling away like so many houses of cards. It is plain, then, that the fancied security of New-York, or any other city, is not as it should be. If the greatest immunity from fire of warehouses and public buildings, is simply visionary. What has happened to Boston may happen to us any day, and on a greater scale as easily as a lesser one. We must face this fact squarely in the face, and we ought instantly to set to work to guard against it.

But how is such a thing to be guarded against? Sooner or later, we may be absolutely certain, a tremendous catastrophe will befall New-York—unless steps are taken to forestall it—which will dwarf the great fire of 1835, and render even the conflagrations of Chicago and Boston comparatively insignificant. How is it to be prevented? and can it be prevented at all? We answer, it can be more readily prevented in New-York than in any city in the world; only we must do the work before hand, and not wait until the calamity is upon us before we bestir ourselves to ward off its successor. We all know, to begin with, that to meet any such emergency as a great fire, the Croton water supply is totally inadequate. There is not more than enough of it for ordinary use, since the streets of a city like New-York ought to be periodically cleansed from its hydrants. Besides, as we know to our cost, the Croton supply is sometimes frozen up. Imagine a fire like this of Boston bursting upon us during such a time as we had last Winter, when for days the water would not flow at all. Now, our resource is close at hand, and consists of the North and East Rivers. In the possession of these streams lies New-York's natural and highly exceptional safeguard against fire. A pipe or pipes of great size should at once be laid, to begin with, from the Battery to Fourteenth-street, with judicious branches at suitable distances. In connection with these pipes, steam force-pumps of adequate power should be set up at the Battery and kept in constant working order. By this means a supply of water, practically unlimited, would be at command at all times and seasons, and, in conjunction with proper steam fire-engines for immediate delivery, would render the prompt subjugation of a fire almost a certainty. As regards the steam fire-engines, we suspect that those in use, like the ones in Boston, are incapable of maintaining a stream at the enormous height to which warehouses are now put up. If such is the case, this, also, should be seen to without delay. Prompt attention to these things may save untold millions of property; and it is certain, that the saving of insurance which such attention would secure, would easily, in no long time, cover ten times the cost. The plan we suggest, or some plan like it, is certain, sooner or later, to be adopted; and we would urge our citizens to lose no time in thus protecting themselves against the most terrible enemy of great cities, the enemy that comes without herald and without parley, and of whose might we have lately had two such awful examples.

The Temper of the South.

How does the South take the election? is a question frequently asked, and which the Southern papers have, with more or less reserve, undertaken, in a number of instances, to answer. On the whole, their answers are in the highest degree encouraging. Without going into detail, or quoting at length from our exchanges, it may fairly be said that the following conclusions are generally accepted:

1. The election is acknowledged by most of even the bitterest opponents of Republicanism to be an irreversible judgment against the extreme Southern view of reconstruction. It is accepted as a declaration that no issue on which parties divide in such a way that the sympathizers with rebellion are on one side, can ever be made again in this country, with any hope that the majority will not be overwhelmingly against those sympathizers.

2. It is accepted as, on the whole, a good-tempered act on the part of the North, and not as an act of bitterness or hostility. Indeed, we doubt if any considerable number of persons were ever deluded by the theory so commonly advanced by "Liberal" Republicans, that to refuse to restore the Democracy to power was an unfriendly act to the South.

3. The conclusion is almost universal that the result of the election secures an opportunity for the South to quietly but energetically devote itself to its material interests, and imposes the duty of doing so without delay, undisturbed by any plans or hopes connected with national politics.

4. It is generally felt that the large proportion of Southern men, heretofore opposed to the Republican Party, who have taken up the cause of Gen. GRANT, is a strong guarantee that every honest effort to make the State Governments pure and efficient will be helped, as far as possible, at Washington.

On the whole, it may be reasonably concluded that the election has removed many obstacles to, and created many inducements for, the thorough tranquillity and steady progress of the South.

Minority Representation at Work.

At the recent election, the people of Illinois chose the members of the lower branch of their Legislature upon the principle known as minority representation. This was in accordance with the Constitution adopted in 1870, and had been determined by a large majority (93,941) on the separate submission of the clause relating to it. It is the first instance of the application of this principle in a large community, for the election of a body exercising sovereign powers. The State is one of the most powerful, in the numbers of its population, in its wealth, and in the prospect of future growth, of all the States in the Union, and the result of so bold an experiment has been awaited with great anxiety by all friends of representative government.

The method employed was the "cumulative vote." That is, instead of the following forms of ballots:

Jno. Smith. John Smith, 1½.
John Brown.

Jno. Smith, 3. John Brown, 3.
Jno. Jones, 1.

By this means any party controlling one-third of the votes of a district was sure to elect a candidate, and the districts were so distributed that [illegible] could have more than two-thirds.

It is too soon to decide definitely the full effect of its minority vote in the Illinois Legislature. But the papers of the State, of both political parties, agree that it has succeeded in several important points. It has produced a better class of nominations, in the first instance, and, in several cases, has compelled the withdrawal of objectionable regular candidates. It has secured a representation of parties in the Assembly nearly proportioned to their strength on a general vote in the State. It has prevented any Republican district, however strong, from excluding wholly the Democrats, and any Democratic district, however strong, from excluding wholly the Republicans; so that no man in any district is without a representative for whom he himself voted. And, finally, it has made the election more pure than before, from the fact that no scheme of fraud could be matured in advance, with any security that it would affect the result.

These certainly are great gains. It remains to be seen how far the conduct of the Legislature will bear out the hopes reasonably felt in regard to it.

Quick Transit.

It is now twelve or fifteen years since the people of this City began to feel the imperative necessity of some quicker mode of transit, from the lower to the upper end of the island, than is afforded by the stages and horse-railroads. During that time, there has been a multitude of projects set on foot for supplying the public want, and innumerable bills have been presented to the Legislature, asking for charters to enable the projectors of rival schemes of quick transit to carry out their plans. Several of these schemes succeeded in passing the Legislature, and were vetoed by the Governor; others received the sanction of the Governor, but were subsequently abandoned, for various causes, by their projectors; none of them have become accomplished facts, and, to all appearances, the City is no nearer the attainment of the object which, all so anxiously desire than it was fifteen years ago. Meantime, the need of quick transit is becoming more urgent every day; and the recent distemper among horses, which threatened at one time to leave our citizens without any mode of conveyance to and from their places of business, has brought home to all the absolute and indispensable necessity that something in the way of quick transit should be undertaken by somebody and carried forward to completion without delay.

What are the prospects? When the Legislature adjourned last Spring, it left in the hands of the Governor three different bills conferring charters for quick transit railroads in this City. One was known as the Vanderbilt charter, which granted the privilege of constructing an underground road from the Forty-second-street Depot to the City Hall Park; another was known as Swain's "Three Tier" scheme, which authorized the building of a road on the west side of the town, partly under and partly over ground, running through blocks, and the right of way to be purchased by the Company building the road; and the third was known as "Gilbert's Elevated Railway," running on arches spanning the street from curb to curb, the route to be designated by commissioners named in the bill. In addition to these schemes, all of which received the sanction of Gov. HOFFMAN after the Legislature adjourned, there was an existing charter, known as the "Central Underground," which passed the Legislature several years ago, but which has never, as yet, been able to find capitalists ready to avail themselves of its franchise. It is now controlled by parties interested in a combination of outside railroads terminating at Harlem River, who desire an entrance into the City independent of the line now owned and monopolized by Commodore VANDERBILT. If the Central Underground is ever built, it will be more as a tributary road to the combination of roads outside of the City, than with special view to the quick transit of passengers in the City.

With regard to the other schemes which obtained charters from the last Legislature, we are informed that the Vanderbilt project, from which the public were led to expect something speedy and practical, has been virtually abandoned. This scheme, like that of the Central Underground, which has the better charter of the two, involves an outlay of money which fails to commend it to the minds of capitalists as an enterprise for prudent or profitable investment. SWAIN'S "three-tier" scheme has a good many admirers, and some backers in the financial world, but nothing has been done, as yet, toward pushing it forward, beyond making a survey of the ground and taking some initiatory steps toward securing the right of way. Apparently the only one of the four chartered projects that holds out any immediate prospect of even a commencement of the solution of the quick-transit problem, is that known as Gilbert's Elevated Railway. This road, we understand, will, in a few weeks, be in actual process of construction. The charter appoints Gen. DIX, HENRY G. STEBBINS, CHESTER A. ARTHUR, Geo. Q. A. GILLMORE, and SHEPHERD KNAPP, a Board of Commissioners to designate the route of the road, with the proviso that no part of the route shall be between the easterly line of Sixth-avenue, and the easterly line of Third-avenue. The Commissioners have had several sittings, and will probably make their report, which the charter says shall be final, during the present week. It is understood that the plan decided upon is that of [illegible] down on the west side of the City, or vice versâ. As there are to be two tracks, both sides of the City will be accommodated with up and down trains, one train running one way and the other the opposite way, and all of them running [illegible] the City. If the terminus [illegible] be located in Second-avenue, on reaching Harlem River the road will follow the line of the river up to Eighth, Ninth or Tenth avenue, and then come down on the west side of the City. All trains will run to the Battery or Bowling-green, and it is expected that the distance between that point and Harlem River will be made in twenty minutes.

The tracks are to rest on iron arches, tastefully ornamented, and will be elevated twenty-four feet above the centre of the street. The sides of each track are to be inclosed in a trough, or half section of a tube, which will obstruct the view of the engine and cars from horses in the street. Between the two tracks, in the triangular space formed by the junction of the semi-circular troughs, is to be a pneumatic tube for the transmission of packages, newspapers and mails. The projectors of this scheme of quick transit assure the public that within five weeks from the time the Commissioners make their report fixing the line of the road, they will commence work, and that from that time forward they will construct at least one mile per month until the whole is completed. They say they will find no difficulty in raising all the capital they need for the enterprise, without going out of New-York City and Westchester County. The estimated cost of the work is seven hundred thousand dollars per mile, and when completed in the manner proposed, it is claimed that the difficult and long-delayed problem of quick transit in New-York will be solved to the satisfaction and delight of the public—that the structure will not only afford a comfortable, safe, and speedy transit from one end of the City to the other, but that it will be an ornament to the streets through which it passes, and will be the pride and boast of the people living along its line. It is to be hoped that these predictions will prove true, and the sooner the better.

The Mansard Mania.

Among the few, the immortal names that are likely to receive but a modicum of honor, in America, for a generation or two, is Mansard. When that ingenious Frenchman invented the architectural device which was to carry his memory to a far from admiring posterity, he probably little thought what a fatal gift he was conferring upon the nations. Or it may be, on the other hand, that he did; that he calculated with diabolical cunning on the profit his invention would bring to himself and the members of his guild. There is a story of a thoughtful glazier who was in the habit of hiring small boys to go before him and playfully break the windows on his route, which he, presently appearing, would be called on to repair. It may be that MANSARD's invention was the fruit of a like forecast, for, of course, it is obvious to the meanest intelligence that the more buildings are burnt down, the more there will be to put up, and so the more work for architects and builders.

If this surmise be correct M. MANSARD's shrewdness cannot be too highly commended. As a business investment, his roof is a most eminent success. For its real danger is not in its combustibility, though, in that respect it leaves nothing to be desired, so much as its universal adaptability, not to say indispensableness. Before it came we were happy barbarians, living in shapeless hovels of stone and mortar, tolerably fire-proof to be sure, but wofully lacking in sweetness and light. But though the herd were contented with this groveling security, esthetic souls still felt an aching void, an indefinable longing, which the plaster finials of Grace Church could not satisfy, and which even the chaste splendors of the Fifth-avenue Hotel were powerless to quench. The Mansard roof appeared, and everybody felt at once that it was the very thing we had all been waiting and wishing for—a sort of architectural long-lost brother. It was seen at a glance to be like those books which no gentleman's library should be without. No edifice of any sort seemed complete without it; it looked equally well on a model pig-pen or a life insurance palace—the fire insurance people somehow affected it less; it was as necessary to the elegance of a cottage ornée as to the massive grandeur of a county jail. And today, as every architect knows, to a gentleman's residence a Mansard roof is as indispensable an adjunct as a mortgage.

Therein, as we have said, lies the terrible power of M. MANSARD's fatal invention. Chicago and Boston have taught us that every Mansard roof we put up costs on an average about ten millions of dollars. It is, therefore, almost too expensive a luxury for the wealthiest city to indulge in freely, but the misfortune is that, like the victim of the onium habit, we can no longer do without it. We have become, so to speak, intoxicated on Mansard roof beyond hope of redemption; it exerts over our architects the same awful fascination that the basilisk was fabled to possess. We know it is ruin, sooner or later, to any city that yields to its tyranny, yet we go on helplessly adding every day to our chances of destruction. It is a shirt of Nessus that M. MANSARD has left us; one which, knowing its deadly character, we are still powerless to reject.

Yet, if we cannot entirely escape from the Mansard slavery, we may still take measures to lessen its perils. By constructing our roofs of iron, for example, will not the architects satisfy both his consistence and the insurance companies? The most determined lover of sweetness and light would probably, on the whole, rather not be burnt up than otherwise, and, if Mansard roofs are indispensable to our happiness, why not study to make them as fire-proof as possible? They will be quite as handsome—or as hideous—as they are now, and we shall not be forced to burn down a city every year by [illegible] of their inventor.

AMUSEMENTS.

Music.

FRALIAN OPERA.

Mme. Pauline Lucca successfully [illegible] to the influences of the weather, [illegible] able to sing in "Le Nozze de Figaro." Persons interested in operatic affairs have long been aware that [illegible] since the prima vest a valiant and conscientious artist like Mme. Lucca from fulfilling her [illegible] the stage; but for the benefit of [illegible] a physician's certificate as to the lady's inability to appear was appended to the announcement to the effect that "Crispino e la Comare" would be given instead of Mozart's work. Miss Kellogg, as usual, sang Amneris. Wednesday, it is hoped, Mme. Lucca will be heard in "Faust."

RUBINSTEIN CONCERTS.

The first of the chamber concerts in which Messrs. Rubinstein and Wieniawski, and the remainder of Mr. Grau's company, strengthened by efficient instrumental aid, are to take part, may be attended this evening at Steinway Hall. The selections are of the highest order, and the performances of the chief interpreters thereof are too recent to make necessary any reference to their fitness to recite the finest music which may be chosen for recital.

Dramatic.

MR. SOTHERN AS "LORD DUNDREARY" AT WALLACK'S THEATRE.

Mr. Sothern's whimsical and original creation of Dundreary is so well known in the City where it first found appreciation that it needs no fresh description at this late day. As a piece of dramatic news, however, we may record that "Our American Cousin" was again acted here last night, this time at Wallack's Theatre, and that the favorite comedian named sustained his old-time character. All the former charm of Mr. Sothern's Dundreary, its humor, and its variety, its freak and its toughness still remain to it, and to these there are now added a mellowness and an elaboration not seen before. As a piece of histrionic genre painting Mr. Sothern's Dundreary cannot be said to have a rival, and if, considered in its realistic aspect, it errs on the side of caricature, the measure of its success has not been lessened by the circumstance. The impersonation is certainly one of supreme finish, and is pregnant with an exquisite sense of the ludicrous. Pathos and humor, that which brings laughter and that which brings tears, are still the strongest elements for commanding dramatic prosperity, and when either is vigorously employed it avails little to criticise overcolessly the element of exact fidelity to nature. Mr. Sothern met his customary fortune last night at the hands of his audience. He was joyously welcomed and evoked laughter and applause at every turn. His appearance is but the beginning, we may be sure, of a long tenure of success. "Our American Cousin" will doubtless run for some time, and Mr. Sothern has plenty of novelty in his repertory to back up his engagement thereafter. His support last night was, on the whole, very good. Mr. Stoddard made a quaint and forcible study of Abel Handcock, and Mr. Polk did his best with Asa Trenchard. The first-named gentleman was more cautious than usual to avoid exaggeration, and some of his scenes displayed uncommon dramatic power. Mr. Polk is as yet rather vague and uncertain in "Our American Cousin." He is commendably afraid of overdoing the part, but in avoiding Scylla he stumbles on Charybdis. With practice his handling of the character may improve. The ladies of the play did excellently. Miss Coghlan was charming in Mary Meredith, albeit a milk-maid in silk stockings is rather an anomaly. Miss Rogers, Mrs. Foster and Mme. Fonsi were all pains-taking and acceptable in parts affording no great scope for the exhibition of talent, and Mr. Holland was more like an ill-tempered shopman, as Lawt. Vernon, than a gentleman. Some pretty new scenes gave completeness to the mounting of the piece, and the infinite delight with which it was received by the audience gave token of a protracted run. "Our American Cousin" will be repeated, we need hardly say, every night until further notice.

BURLESQUE AT THE OLYMPIC.

The greeting which an exceedingly numerous audience, gathered at the Olympic Theatre last evening, extended to Miss Lydia Thompson and her company, afforded proof that the popularity of burlesque and its merriest interpreters is not yet on the wane. Miss Thompson and the other artists of the troupe appeared in "Aladdin the Second," a spectacular extravaganza, brimful of the needed opportunities for scenic display and for songs and dances, and the efforts of all the parties concerned—efforts as hearty as though the most important of labors were involved instead of the rehearsal of the lightest of pieces—were much enjoyed and encouraged by almost continuous applause. The pressure of graver events upon our columns precludes the detailed notice which the beauty of the stage-costume of "Aladdin the Second," the brightness of several numbers of the accompanying music, and the most spirited portions of a very spirited performance will make necessary at a later day. At present we must be content with recording the success of the play and of its performers, and with mentioning the fact that the drolleries of Messrs. Beckett and Edwin, the grace and vivacity of Miss Thompson, and the singing of Mlle. Dubois were, as of old, conspicuous features of an entertainment which attracts and delights in defiance of the familiarity of audiences with its subject matter and actors. One of the most effective incidents of the night must also be cited: Mr. Beckett and Miss Thompson sang the duet of the gendarmes in "Genevieve de Brabant," with marvelous fidelity to the vocal execution and acting of the well-known French players, and were constrained by the hearers to add at least a dozen supplementary verses to the two forming the English setting, intended to correspond in form with the original couplets.

BRITISH CLAIMS.

The Question of Allegiance Before the British Claims Commission—A Man Born in the United States Claimed as a British Subject.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 11.—The mixed Commission on British and American claims have dismissed on demurrer the case of J. F. Mogride against the United States. The facts are as follows: The latter demurred to the memorial of the claimant, on the ground that he had no standing as a British subject, he having been born in the United States, and being, by the laws of this country, a citizen of the United States, and at the time of the alleged injuries domiciled in this country. The British Consul replied to the demurrer that the claimant was born in Pennsylvania of parents who, at the time of his birth, were subjects of Her Britannic Majesty, and who were then on a visit to the United States, but within a few weeks after his birth returned to England, taking the memorialist with them, where he was christened and educated, and remained under the control of his father during his minority. On attaining majority, he claimed and adhered to his allegiance as a British subject, and neither his father nor mother ever renounced allegiance to Her Britannic Majesty. It was, therefore, contended that such a person is, by the law of Great Britain, a British subject, as the child of American parents born abroad, under such circumstances, would be an American citizen; and this has never been doubted. The reply to the demurrer infers that this Commission meant to go no further than to declare that Alexander, whose case was cited in the demurrer, had an American as well as British nationality by force of the statute of Kentucky, which declares that any person born within that State is a citizen thereof; and that under the circumstances of that case Alexander had not made such an election as entitled him to prefer his claim as a British subject.

FRANCE.

Speech of Republican Deputies Among the Public—Speculation as Constitutional Reforms by the Present Assembly.

PARIS, Nov. 11.—A census of the Republican Deputies of the party of the left, in Assembly was held yesterday at Versailles. An declaration of union was made from which it appears that there has been a steady growth of Republicanism among the people of all the departments of France. While the Prefects and Magistrates have become more and more infatuated with anti-Republicanism. The Deputies resolved to wait upon President Thiers to acquaint him with the condition of affairs, and to request such official action as will bring the people and their official representatives into closer relationship. The Republican members also resolved to oppose by all means in their power, and as strongly as do the Monarchists, the adoption of any constitutional reforms by the present national Assembly.

The Temps (newspaper) of today contains an editorial mainly praising the British Government for continuing recourse to arbitration as the means of settlement of international disputes.

Suspension of Bowles Brothers—American Tourists in Europe to Suffer.

PARIS, Nov. 11.—The liabilities of Messrs. Bowles Brothers, the American bankers in this city who have suspended payment, are 500,000 francs. The losses by the suspension of the firm will fall chiefly upon American tourists in Europe.

Meeting of the Adjourned Session of the French National Assembly—Legitimist, Orleanist, Bonapartist and Republican Parties Represented.

PARIS, Nov. 11.—The adjourned session of the National Assembly was opened at Versailles at 2½ P. M. The attendance was unusually full, nearly all the members seats being occupied. The Duke d'Aumale, the Prince de Joinville, Mm. Rouher, and Gambetta, and other party leaders were present. Shortly after the opening of the sitting, President Thiers entered the Chamber and was received with cheers.

The Assembly will probably choose its President to-morrow. It is rumored that the Right will propose the Duke de Broglie, or M. Mare Girardin, for President, in place of M. Grévy.

Reform in the Constitution of the Upper House.

BERLIN, Nov. 11.—At a meeting of the Cabinet today, the Emperor William presiding, it was resolved that a radical reform should be initiated in the Constitution of the Upper House during the current session of the Diet.

The Manhattan Market Opening Last Night—Thirty Thousand People Present.

The Manhattan Market, situated at Thirty-fourth-street and the North River, was formally inaugurated last night. Before 9 o'clock nearly 30,000 people had assembled within the building. The admittance was by purchased tickets, and the admirable music furnished gave the immense structure the appearance of a mammoth promenade concert.

The building stands upon seventy-four City lots, or 180,000 feet of ground. The main building is 800 by 200 feet, with a bulkhead on the river front 200 by 100 feet. The high central area is 80 feet from the floor, and the average height of the entire structure is about 75 feet. Scarcely any wood has been used in the building, the walls being of brick and the arches and pillars of iron. Of course the purpose for which the building is designed prevents any attempt at elaborate decoration, yet still the coloring and ornamentation, such as it is, is tasteful and unique. The entire floor is of concrete, and has a gradual slope to afford the necessary facilities of washing and cleaning.

On the 22d of February, 1871, the erection of this immense structure was commenced, and on the 25th of this month the market will be opened for business purposes. The entire cost of the building is $1,500,000, and the annual income from the rent of the stalls will be $250,000. The market is owned by a stock company, incorporated by an act of Legislature passed March 28, 1870, whose capital stock is $2,000,000, with the power of increasing it to five millions. The stalls will number 700, and the weekly rental will range from $8 50 to $10. Already two-thirds of the stalls have been rented, and before the opening day it is expected that every one will be occupied. In addition to the market proper a plaza for farmers' wagons has been constructed, covering fourteen lots, and fronting on Eleventh-avenue and Thirty-fifth and Thirty-sixth streets. In sixty days from the present date the new market pier, 550 feet in length, and 60 feet in width will be completed. The markets was brilliantly illuminated last night, and until a late hour was visited by many thousands of people.

Notes From the People.

A correspondent states that the lesson of the Boston fire may be expressed in two words, "Mansard roofs," and calls attention to the same structures in this City.

Another correspondent recommends keeping on hand vessels of carbonic acid gas in places convenient for extinguishing flames in buildings.

One correspondent deprecates the practice indulged in by boys, who play with fire in the street, and thereby jeopardize City property, and calls for a prohibitory ordinance.

Another recommends floating fire-engines on the North and East Rivers, and thinks they can be made of as much service in this country as they have been in others.

The Firemen Paid.

The rolls of the firemen and other employes of the Fire Department were forwarded to Controller Green on Saturday afternoon, and were at once put under examination for audit and payment. All of the men were paid yesterday, under direction of the Controller, by the Paymaster of the Finance Department, at Fire Department Head-quarters, the wages due them to the 1st November, amounting to the sum of $66,461 18. The Head-quarters' rolls, embracing the salaries of the Commissioners, clerks and employes of the office for Secretaries and October were also paid at the same time, amounting to $15,000.

Father Burke's Lectures.

Father Burke's lectures in reply to James Anthony Froude will commence to-night at the Academy of Music, and continue on consecutive Tuesday and Thursday evenings until the 26th, inst. His subjects are: "The Norman Invasion," "Ireland Under the Tudors," "Ireland Under Cromwell," "Grattan and the Volunteers," and "Ireland Since the Union."

National Academy of Design.

The Academy of Design opened last evening for the Winter season, with an exhibition of 400 pictures by living artists. A very large number of connoisseurs, art patrons, and literary men was present. As it was quite impossible to obtain a satisfactory view of the paintings last evening, any critical notice of them must be deferred.

THE SOLDIER'S REST.

Obsequies of Gen. Meade in Philadelphia.

An Immense Assembling—Deep Feeling of the People—The Military and Civic Procession—Interment in Laurel Hill.

[From Our Special Correspondent.]

PHILADELPHIA, Tuesday, Nov. 11, 1872.

The City of Philadelphia, the scene of so many great and historical events, never perhaps witnessed such a representation of the power and greatness and genius of the nation, as that which assembled within its limits today, to pay the last tribute of honor and respect to the memory of Major-Gen. George Gordon Meade. The solemn ceremonials, the impressive display, the gathering of thousands from every portion of the country, were well worthy the patriotism, the distinguished services, and the general excellence of character of the departed hero. The whole city appeared wrapt in mourning. The choked utterances of muffled bells, the subdued beat of the kettle-drum, the dull reverberations of the unwafe guns, and the solemn tread of many thousand comrades and unselfected mourners, as the funeral cortège slowly passed through the streets, united to produce a scene of indescribable impressiveness which is not quickly forgotten. From the great soldier who honors the nation as its President, through the long line of distinguished officers, participators with the dead hero in the trials and glories of a gigantic civil war, through the myriads who fought under and gloried in his leadership, through the great minds of the country who trusted him for his deeds, down to the millions of his countrymen who revered him for his exalted reputation as a citizen, the same feeling of sorrow was expressed through their delegates on his demise, and deep and heartfelt their sympathy with the loss sustained by his family and his country. Decked with mourning emblems, the whole City of Philadelphia was astir at an early hour in the morning, and shortly after 7 o'clock vast multitudes began to assemble in the streets adjacent to St. Mark's Church, where the religious services were to take place. The corridors of the Continental, the Girard, the Colonnade, the United States, and the numerous other hotels that afforded accommodation to the military and the visitors, were thronged to excess, all bearing badges and emblems indicative of sorrow and regret. Every one seemed deeply intent on the common purpose, and even the bulletins, continuously posted up in the hotels, announcing the latest news of the disaster which has befallen a sister city, and which has already elicited the deep and unaffected sympathy of the entire nation, did not for any period divert the attention from the resolve to celebrate with fitting appropriateness the funeral services of the hero of Gettysburg. Passing through the crowds into the ocean street, the ear was constantly greeted with enthusiastic praise of the dead, and as comrades of the war, meeting parted, grasped hands over the bier of their commander, they related with touching sincerity numerous instances of his gallantry, his cool bravery under all circumstances, and his great consideration for the personal comfort of his soldiers, which gained him their friendship and affection.

In accordance with a request issued by Mayor Stokely, the suspension of business throughout the city was general. All the Government offices, National, State, county and city, were closed, and no business of any description was transacted. The principal private establishments in the business portions of the city strictly observed the request of the Mayor, and with the exception of the banking institutions, which had no legal authority for closing, the day was observed as Sunday. Independence Hall, in obedience to the directions of the City Councils, was draped in mourning, and was visited by many thousands. The foreign consuls in the city displayed their flags at half-mast, and in all the public buildings and on the windows of private dwellings national banners were displayed appropriately draped in mourning. As the morning wore on the multitudes in the streets continued to increase, and by 9 o'clock Locust, Sixteenth and Seventeenth streets were so densely packed that a strong force of Police were detailed to drive back the crowds, and, ropes being stretched across on either end, no one was permitted to pass without authority of the City Marshals. At 9½ the first arrivals of United States military took place, and shortly after 500 regulars were resting on their arms along the south curb of the thoroughfare. The civic and other kindred organizations then began to arrive, and by 10 o'clock at least 50,000 persons filled the streets, the windows, the trees and house-tops.

At 10 o'clock the doors of St. Mark's Church were thrown open. Gen. McDowell and staff were the first comers, and then followed Gov. Geary and his staff, consisting of A. L. Russell, A. A. G., Col. W. W. Lyons, Gen. R. A. McCoy, and Gen. Thomas J. Jordan. Gen. Sherman drove up in company with Gen. Porter, and were received by Gen. McDowell and Gen. Drum. At 10:30 a carriage drove up to the church, and President Grant, Secretary Robeson, Hon. Adolph E. Borie, and Mr. George J. Mecheson passed in and took their positions near the military. The family of the deceased, dressed in deep mourning, occupied the front seats on the left aisle of the church, and were the objects of much sympathy. At 10¾ o'clock the remains were conveyed from the private residence of the deceased at the south-east corner of Nineteenth and Delaney streets to the church, accompanied by the city troops and a large procession of citizens, including Theodore Cuyler, Morton McMichael, George B. Lusby, Judge Allison, Judges Finletter, Ludlow, and Paxson; J. B. Lippincott, J. B. Townsend, A. J. Drexel, Jay Cooke, Senator Scott, Senator Cameron, ex-Gov. Randolph, of New-Jersey, and Gov. Parker. Gen. Barstow, Gen. W. Childs, Joseph Patterson, George H. Stuart, Samuel Dickson, Eli K. Price, Major-Gen. Foster, Col. Andenreid, Col. Bacon, of Gen. Sherman's staff; Gen. Cooke, Gen. Sawtelle, Col. Sackett, Col. Easton, Col. McKeever, Lieut.-Col. Cadwalader, Lieut.-Col. Biddle, Major J. E. Carr, Capt. Dove, Capt. Williams, Gen. H. Heintzelman, Col. King, Col. Storr, Gen. Ruff, Gen. Bingham, Judges Paxson, Pierce, and others. The pall-bearers were Lieut.-Gen. Sheridan, Major-Gens. Humphreys, Parke, and Wright, of the army; Rear-Admirals Turner and Lardner, and Commodores Scott and Mullaney, of the navy.

As the remains entered the church, which by this time was filled to its utmost limit, they were met at the door by the pastor, Rev. Dr. Hoffman, Bishops Whipple, Odenheimer, and Stevens, about twenty local clergymen and fifty choristers, who slowly preceded the procession up the aisle, the choir and the combined First Artillery and Governor's Island Bands playing a funeral dirge from "Robert le Diable." The scene was most impressive in its character.

As the anthem commencing "I am the resurrection and the life" was sung, that vast assemblage bowed its head in silent prayer, and not another sound could be heard in the church save the sighs and sobs of the relatives of the deceased, which they vainly attempted to suppress. Gen. Meade, Sherman, and Sheridan, who were the grandees of all eyes, watched the services with great interest. The choir then sung, "Lord, let me know mine end;" the assistant of the rector read the lesson from the fifteenth of First Corinthians, which was followed by the hymn, "Asleep in Jesus," according to the arrangement of Dr. Muhlenberg.

Bishop Whipple now advanced and delivered the funeral address.

TO LAUREL HILL.

From Eighteenth and Locust streets to Greene, and thence to the Park—a distance of several miles—the whole way was lined with people, and, while some might have been there as mere spectators, the great majority appreciated the loss sustained by the nation, and by their appearance gave unmistakable evidence of sorrow. Upwards of 200 of the veterans of the war bedecked with marks of grief were deeply impressed. Along the route every house bore emblems of mourning. From some was suspended the national flag draped in sombre color, others displayed flags at half-mast, and more than few had in their windows portraits of the dead soldier. Notwithstanding the crowded condition of the streets, the utmost order prevailed, the people vieing with the police in the preservation of the solemnities of the hour. In the Park, at every prominent point, on the hillsides, on the house-tops overlooking the route, the numbers of spectators were crowded together, awaiting the arrival of the cortège. When the procession entered the Park the head of the column took the road next the Fairmount Water-works, and on arriving near the river turned to the right, and marched beyond the Lansdowne Monument, where they halted in the rear of the militia. The escort, as it came to this walk, turned to the right in front of the militia. The body was then taken from the caisson by eight marines and carried on board the steamer Undine, which was assigned by the city authorities to take them to Laurel Hill Cemetery. The relatives of the deceased followed the pall-bearers and mourners, the officiating clergy, the ex-members of his personal staff, and the invited guests followed on board the boat. As the coffin reached the deck a battalion composed of marines, sailors, regulars, and artillery fired three volleys, and the minute-gun swelling the volume of sound seemed to bid farewell to the dead. The procession then broke up and the steamer proceeded up the river to Laurel Hill Cemetery, the band playing the dead march in Saul. The Divine Service at the saloon from the Schuylkill Navy as it started from the dock. When the funeral party arrived at the Cemetery, the remains were quickly removed and carried to the head of the grave. The services, which were conducted by the pastor of the deceased, Rev. Dr. Hoffman, were plain and unbroken by any ceremony. The ordinary Episcopal service was read, and surrounded by loving and sorrowing friends, the earthly remains of Major-Gen. George Gordon Meade were deposited in the tomb.

THE GIFT CONCERT SWINDLE.

Said by the Police on the Concert Ticket Lottery in Broadway—Capture of the Proprietor and Clerks—The Proprietor Held for Examination.

For some time past the passers along Broadway have noticed an illuminated sign in front of No. 509, announcing a concert to be given at the Academy of Music on Jan. 4, and prizes varying from $1,000 to $1 offered to every purchaser of a ticket. Those who were tempted to examine further found along the sides of an otherwise vacant store platforms protected by a railing, behind which were several young men, who announced that the tickets attached to the boards against the wall represented, besides an admission to the Academy, several thousands of dollars, (naming the sum,) and that each purchaser would have a chance of getting a portion of that amount. As each supposed lucky purchaser won a prize—or some confederate pretended so to do—the amount would be announced in loud tones by each of the clerks, and the remaining large sum reduced accordingly. By these means several thoughtless persons were induced to make purchases, and in most cases left the place minus their money. As the golden visions presented had induced several youths to steal in order to gain a sudden fortune, and complaints had been made by parents and employers to Capt. Byrne, of the Mercer-street Police, an attempt was made to induce the Justice at Jefferson Market Court to issue a warrant for the arrest of all concerned; but the Magistrate "could find no law to reach the case." Yesterday, however, Justice Fowler, acting as Police Magistrate, found a sample in the Lottery law touching the matter, and issued a warrant. Warning was given by the Police to the persons having charge of the premises that if they commenced business an arrest would be made; but disregarding the warning, a protector, consisting of three Wood, employed fifteen clerks, and at 11 o'clock A. M. opened the store. For an hour and a half the clerks were principally engaged in tacking up the tickets, but no attempt was made to sell any until 12¼ o'clock P. M., when, finding the Police had not interfered, the sale was begun as usual. The Police were, however, watching the movement, and at ten minutes to 1 o'clock P. M. Capt. Byrne, Sergt. Holbrow, and a section of Police entered the store. There were about 150 persons in the place, the majority of whom, as soon as they beheld the officers, made a dash for the street. The order of the Captain to close the door was not made quick enough to secure all who had been inside, but yet a large number of on-lookers and speculators were detained. The rush into the street of those who purchased tickets and the appearance of the officers naturally caused a great excitement on Broadway, and in a few minutes nearly 5,000 persons were collected on the block, stopping travel on both sidewalk and roadway. The Police soon secured the proprietor and clerks, and then allowed the others to depart, as no charge could be made against them as mere purchasers. The proprietor and clerks went then taken to the Mercer-street Station, where the latter having been incorporated, and found so, late this morning been bailed as clerks, were allowed to go on their good behavior, while the proprietor, who gave his name as James Wood, aged fifty-five, residing at No. 600 Broadway, was taken to Jefferson Market Court. There he was by Justice Fowler for examination on a bail bond of $500. Waste Wood was at Court when Police held possession of the store; but when the bail bond was signed the officers were instructed to surrender possession to the former proprietor, which action was, of course, obeyed.

HOMICIDE IN BROOKLYN.

A Car Conductor Arrested for Causing the Death of a Passenger.

Henry Balwinkel, a German citizen, aged forty-five years, residing with his family at the corner of Franklin-avenue and Madison-street, died yesterday morning at his residence under circumstances that created suspicion of foul play. Shortly after eleven Sunday, he stepped alone to visit a friend living in Second-avenue, New-York. At ½ 7 P. M. he returned home covered with blood, which was flowing copiously from wounds on the face. He stated to his wife that he had been beaten by the conductor of car No. 201 of the Flushing-avenue line. On returning to Brooklyn, he said, he waited at the corner of Bridge and Sand streets, until a Flushing-avenue car came along. It was car No. 201. He hailed it, but neither the conductor nor driver paid any attention to him. He followed and overtook the car at Jay and Sand streets, and two blocks past the place where he hailed it. On getting on board, he remonstrated with the conductor for not heeding his call. The conductor angrily expounded the rule, and called him a "nasty fellow." He said he turned from the platform of the rear end of the car, and near Jay avenue, as he was in the act of getting off the car, the conductor struck him on the face with his clenched fist. He reached home, and after getting washed, wanted to go to the stables of the Company in order to have the conductor arrested. He had gone but a block or so, when he became so faint that his wife and his brother-in-law, who was with him, had to assist him home. He complained of a pain in the head, and after lying on the sofa a while his wife aided him in going to bed. At 12 o'clock midnight he was breathing heavily. His wife asked him what was the matter; he replied that he had been drinking, and then again went to sleep. When he wife woke up at 5 o'clock yesterday morning she found he was dead. Mrs. Balwinkel notified Coroner Jones, who ordered a post-mortem examination, which was made by Dr. Shepard. At 5 o'clock P. M. yesterday William H. Beckelman, the conductor of car No. 201, Flushing-avenue line, was arrested by Detective Van Wagner, of the Brooklyn Police Central Office, and locked up in the First Precinct Station-house, to await the result of the Coroner's investigation.

BOARD OF AUDIT.

The Board of Audit met yesterday.

Commissioner Van Nort presented a packet of sixteen mandamuses which he said had been served upon him, and he desired that they be referred to the Corporation Counsel.

Controller Green said that some of these mandamuses had been already referred by himself to the Corporation Counsel, and some to Mr. Strahan.

Commissioner VAN NORT—Mr. Strahan is not counsel to this Board, and I cannot see why these matters should be referred to him. I repeat my motion.

Mr. STRAHAN, President of the Department of Public Parks—Has not Mr. Strahan done business for this Board?

Mr. VAN NORT—No; he has done business for Mr. Green. Messrs. Porter and Pierrepont were appointed counsel to this Board, and they or Mr. O'Gorman are the proper persons to refer these matters to.

Mr. GREEN—I move as an amendment that none of these writs have been referred to Mr. O'Gorman but now referred to Mr. Strahan, and also seven.

Mr. VAN NORT—I do not think it is in your province to refer to Mr. Strahan. Suppose I should refer papers to private counsel, would this Board recognize such proceeding? I think not; it is not in my power, nor is it in my opinion in your power to do so.

Mr. STEBBINS—Well, I move that Mr. Strahan be authorized to proceed in his investigation into any papers now in his possession, and that if necessary, the Board designate him as one of the counsel to this Board.

A vote was then taken on the amendment, Messrs. Green and Stebbins voted in the affirmative, Mr. Van Nort in the negative. Mr. Van Nort explained his vote by saying that he did not think it necessary to employ additional counsel.

Mr. Green declared the amendment carried. Mr. Van Nort protested, as he said the amendment involved an expenditure of money, and would require a concurrent vote. Mr. Green replied that the amendment was adopted.

Mr. Van Nort's protest was entered on the minutes.

The following business was then transacted:

The Clerk to the Board read a peremptory mandamus from Judge Leonard, of the Supreme Court, ordering the Board to pay the claim of Thomas Canary for watering and sprinkling roads and avenues under contract, not to exceed $15,000, or show cause why payment should not be made.

The Controller said that he believed that the claim was most excessive, there being an overcharge of fully two-thirds.

A vote was taken upon authorizing payment. Messrs. Stebbins and Green voted in the affirmative, Mr. Van Nort in the negative. He believed the contract was illegal, as made with Messrs. Tweed & Co. But the Legislature subsequently legalized it, and Judges Porter and Pierrepont decided that payment should be made. He would therefore vote yes. Payment was accordingly authorized.

THE HARLEM COURT-HOUSE.

The Frauds Investigated—Important Testimony of J. McBride Davidson.

The Senate Committee of Investigation into the Harlem Court-house frauds held another session yesterday at the City Hall. Messrs. Truman and Weismann were the only members present. Mr. Charles Kitchell appeared as counsel for the prosecution, and ex-Judge Holsch J. Waterbury for the Ward.

J. J. McBride Davidson testified that he had known Genet for fifteen or twenty years; the indorsement on the warrant for $4,802, dated July 14, 1871, was not in his handwriting; there was an agreement by which he should furnish material for the Ninth District Court-house, amounting to $4,802; the bill he presented was ever furnished by him according to the estimate; he never received one cent, nor does he know who did receive the money; Genet told him that he had arranged to get the money, and that witness should receive payment when he had delivered the material.

J. McVinney, of One Hundred and Twenty-eighth-street, near the Court-house, was then examined. He said that he had been in the employ of John Scallon for about fifteen days, and rented a piece of ground of him, 40 by 12 feet, at $100 a year; never saw more than four carts at work on the ground at one time; one of the men at work on the Court-house were sent to work on Mr. Genet's house, at One Hundred and Twenty-sixth-street and Fifth-avenue; they always came every two weeks to the Court-house to receive their pay; never saw any lumber taken to the Court-house, as there was no occasion for using it. [The Court-house pay-roll was here exhibited to the witness, who said he saw the names of several men upon it who had been employed on Genet's house, Samuel Campbell, the foreman, among the number.]

John Wilson, of Ninth-avenue, Long Island, a boss carpenter, testified that he began to work at the Ninth District Court-house in May, 1871, as foreman of a gang of carpenters for his brothers, who was in partnership at the time with David C. Baxter; Mr. Baxter was then engaged in building Mr. Genet's house; none of the carpenters on the Court-house ever sold at that time were at work on Mr. Genet's house; some lumber that was on the dock he had seen carted to Genet's house by Rogers, Feeley, Howe, and others; the witness helped to unload the lumber and to work some of it up, pine and black-walnut, in Genet's house; there was some lumber at Manhattanville, which was also worked up for that house.

Redmond Murphy, a teamster in the employ of John Wilson, testified that he had delivered material at the Court-house for Wilson, but never received a ticket or delivery when he did so; always received such tickets when he delivered goods at other places; Mr. Oliver Wilson's carpenter, Gerard, came to take the goods to Genet's house, and Wilson himself to take them to the Court-house. The other witness examined yesterday was Denis Ossey, another of Wilson's teamsters, who gave testimony similar to that of Redmond Murphy. The Committee will hold another session at 2 o'clock.

The Woodhull-Claflin Case.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Our attention has been called to a statement published in several of yesterday's (Sunday) papers in the report of the proceedings in Court on Saturday, on the hearing of the complaint made by Mr. Lathon O. Claflin against Mrs. Woodhull, Miss Claflin, and Mr. Blood, as having been made by Mr. James E. Maxwell, under oath, in which our names are mentioned. We are entreated by Mr. Maxwell's counsel, if it be without any foundation whatever, to make a correction as he has testified to all having taken place in our presence, or in the presence of either of us. Mr. Claflin has never in our presence, or in the presence of either of us, said or done anything of the character imputed to him by Mr. Maxwell. We regret that the close of the examination prevents us from making this statement in Court.

You will, in justice to us as well as Mr. Claflin, oblige us by publishing this note.

THE MONEY MARKET.

Active Measures to be Taken by the Government.

Large Sales of Gold Contemplated—The Stock Market is to be Relieved by Every Possible Means—No Danger of a Panic.

The Boston fire had, naturally, a decided and depressing effect, yesterday, upon the New-York money and stock markets, though there were no indications of any immediate or serious panic. On the contrary, the feeling on the street, though an agitated one, was that of hopefulness. The first note of any change in the routine of business was the sudden decline in all kinds of marketable stocks of from one to fifteen per cent. Government bonds were also quoted one per cent lower than the rates on Saturday, and as the fire in Boston also caused a depression in the English market, American securities were reported by cable as having fallen there in the same ratio.

This marked decline in all kinds of securities led many leading operators to believe that a panic would ensue, if prompt and decisive measures were not at once adopted both by the Government and the mercantile community. Judge Richardson, the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, having arrived in town yesterday, placed himself in communication with several prominent bankers, and gave assurances that the Government would do all in its power to prevent any monetary panic. He remained at the office of the Assistant Treasurer all day, and obtained the drift of public opinion, besides a correct idea of the proper and most feasible plan for co-operating with the Street.

It seemed to be the universal sentiment in the afternoon that no immediate steps were necessary, as the market seemed to be strengthening, but that a change might occur today. The Assistant Secretary, therefore, took no active step, but signified his intention of again visiting Wall-street today to feel the pulse of the market.

It is understood that should the necessity occur, Judge Richardson will advise Secretary Boutwell to dispose of a large amount of gold coin, in order that the market may be relieved from any pressure prevailing. This measure will, no doubt, be adopted, as large shipments of coin for foreign liquidation are taking place every day. It was ascertained after banking hours, that Judge Richardson had made up his mind to sell a large quantity of gold today, and buy in bonds with the proceeds, in order to throw the paper currency on the market. This will have the effect to lessen the necessity for forced sales of stocks, and restore a necessary degree of buoyancy to the general market.

The amount of gold to be sold today, should the necessity arise, will, it is understood on good authority, be fully $5,000,000. Of course, should there appear to be no pressing necessity for this action the Government will refrain, as it is considered best to keep the gold in reserve until necessity arises for its expenditure. In the event of a partial demand for relief being settled, the Treasury will probably issue a portion of the retired greenbacks now held.

In any event it is quite certain that the Government will do whatever is deemed best to prevent a panic and restore confidence among the members of the business community of the metropolis, and thereby relieve the anxiety of merchants throughout the country.

The Question Considered in Washington—Full Confidence Felt in the Steadiness of the Mercantile Community.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 11.—There will probably be no action on the part of the Treasury Department in regard to the Boston calamity. Undoubtedly such action would be taken very quickly should the emergency demand it, but all the dispatches received today by the Secretary of the Treasury, especially from bank officers and capitalists, have been of a very reassuring character. There has been no excitement in Boston financially, and not enough in New-York to require the serious attention of the Secretary. There is the utmost confidence felt here in official circles that the wealth and substance of Boston will rise far above the requirements of the occasion, and that the credit of her banks, insurance companies and business men safely through the crisis. In fact, a splendid exhibition of the reserved strength and resources of the proud city is looked for; a demonstration of that true conservatism for which she is so worthily famous. Some of the telegrams received today by the Secretary from New-York and the West have called for an increase of the currency. Those from the West bore evidence of having been inspired in New-York. It is not likely any such action will be taken.

WALL-STREET'S FEARS.

Great Excitement Yesterday Among the Bankers and Brokers—Suspension of Firms—Affairs in the Cotton and Produce Exchanges.

It was anticipated that terrible excitement would rule in Wall-street yesterday, consequent upon the news of the great Boston conflagration. All day Sunday speculation was rife as to the probable effect of the fire upon the stock list, and the principal hotels were thronged with bankers and brokers, who were anxious to form some idea as to the extent of the depreciation. Even on Sunday, many parties, anxious to save themselves from the ruin which a panic on Monday might accomplish, settled their lines of stocks at various figures, far below the prices of Saturday. Yesterday morning, therefore, as the hour of 10 approached, (the time for opening the Stock Exchange,) every one who had any interest at stake gathered about the doors and awaited admittance.

As soon as the doors were opened the crowd rushed through the several entrances, and in an incredibly short space of time filled every available position in the immense Exchange. The keepers were powerless in the general confusion, and strangers, bankers, brokers and Press representatives were crowded promiscuously in the main hall. The galleries were densely packed with eager spectators, among whom many ladies were noticed.

The Exchange immediately became the scene of almost indescribable confusion, such as was never before known in its history, even the Chicago conflagration failing to produce such intense and universal excitement. Many went into the hall expecting to leave it ruined, and few entered the scene without feeling serious loss. It was several minutes before any constitutions could be distinguished amid the perfect Babel of sounds, but when the opening figures were heard, a feeling of relief passed through the entire Exchange that matters were so much better than had been expected. The market soon afterward found its level, and it became evident that there would be no panic. The opening prices obtained for stocks were much better than those at which settlements were made on Saturday night, and the entire market gradually advanced under the general feeling that the Boston disaster had been overrated, at least its effect upon the money interests of the country. As fresh telegrams from Boston were being hourly received, giving lower estimates of the losses, the market continued to strengthen, and finally closed much better than had been anticipated. It was generally thought by members of the Exchange, also, that Boston being a city where credit is given rather than asked, that the disaster will affect that city and New-England more closely than the country at large, and, therefore, miscellaneous stocks should not suffer such a depression as was occasioned by the destruction of Chicago, a city built and doing business on Eastern credit and capital. It was generally conceded by the leading financiers that the worst shock has been experienced, and that all danger of panic had passed over.

There were but two suspensions officially announced, and these comparatively insignificant: R. W. White, capital $200,000, doing business at No. 5 Wall-street, and Pillot, Perry & Co., No. 44 Broad-street, not rated. The fact that there were but two suspensions upon the eve of such a disaster, was regarded as favorable to the general market. The complete list which the TIMES published in its issue of yesterday was free of the loss and insurance on every building destroyed in Boston, also aided the members of the Exchange materially in arriving at an estimate of the magnitude of the disaster and the effect it would have upon the prices of stocks.

The conflagration was the general theme of conversation yesterday among the members of the Produce Exchange, although prices of commodities dealt in there were but little affected. Boston and New-York have but little intercourse in produce, most of the provisions consumed in each city coming directly through from the West. The disaster also generally regarded as affecting few places outside of Boston materially, except in the way of fire insurance. The Cotton Exchange, also, was the scene of much excitement during the day. It was doubted that the destruction of so large stocks of cotton would not prove a serious matter, owing to the improvement in prices.

BOSTON'S INSURANCE BILL.

How New-York Insurance Companies are Affected—A List of the Largest Losses of the Boston Firemen.

The extremely prevailing uneasy feeling incident to the insurance companies, as to the losses incurred by these corporations, was aggravated yesterday. Stockholders and policy-holders visited the various offices where they owned stock or were insured, and were profuse with inquiries as to the stability of the company. Startling rumors of the insolvency of several companies were afloat, many of them evidently started by insurance brokers, who hoped, by shaking the faith of policy-holders in the company in which they were insured, to make commissions, by inducing them to insure in others. Mentions of insolvents were called heavily, and statements of the condition of companies placarded in doors and windows. A brisk business was driven by those companies, who had small losses to record, and interested inquirers breathed freely, when they were positively assured by companies who lost heavily, that they were abundantly able to pay all losses and hold a surplus. Stockholders especially congratulated themselves, upon ascertaining that though they would get no dividends soon, that they would not be assessed to save their company. Many companies who do a purely local business and have no agents or risks in Boston, made an ostentatious show of placards outside, stating that the company was "O. K." "all right," "not a dollar loss in Boston." In the various companies affected, clerks and book-keepers were silent, and the questioner was referred to the Presidents or Secretaries. It was easy to discover the unstable condition of some of the companies by the desperate efforts of officials to keep up an appearance of unconcern. Some companies nearly or hopelessly lost acknowledge that they had stopped taking risks, or had little hope of recovering. Others who declined taking risks early in the day, resumed business after a meeting of directors, civ me as a reason that deficient cash capital, and the plea that it was unjust. It is claimed by the various insurance companies, whose own estimate of their losses and risks is given below, that they may fall short of these amounts when a final estimate is made. Although it would appear now that everything is all lost in the burnt district, the will be a saving of the flames have undoubtedly left much of immense value behind.

One of the heaviest insurance losers by the conflagration is the Liverpool and London and Globe Insurance Company. The total amount of their risk in the burnt district is $1,620,500. A cable message received at the office in William-street says:

Draw for loss at Boston as required.

BROOKE, BANK, Liverpool.

The Imperial, another English Company, have their loss estimated at $1,000,000, and the North British American state a loss of $600,000, claiming that this sum is not more than a fifth of their risk. The Firemen's Fund, of California, North American, Manufacturers', Eliot, Washington, Merchants' and Mercantile Insurance Companies, of Boston, and the Hartford, of Hartford, Conn., announced late in the day that he had not heard from the North American, Washington and Merchants that has been Manufacturers, Eliot and Merchants' had written to him to stop taking risks, and that the Hartford Company's losses were stated by the President to be $600,000, but that the Company could stand the loss. The Home Insurance Company of New-York footed up their losses at $300,000, but felt no fear of their ability to pay without assessing stockholders.

The Phenix Company, New-York, losing $430,000, were also confident that they would be able to pay without shutting up shop.

The Ætna, of Hartford, with assets of $5,500,000, is the heaviest loser under $1,000,000. The companies enumerated below, are probably the heaviest losers. The International, Humboldt, Mechanics', Corn Exchange, and Relief Companies, it was rumored yesterday would be forced to suspend business. The International and Humboldt had stopped taking risks.

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

At the Exchange yesterday, Monday, Nov. 11, the following least transactions were consummated by James M. Miller, all by order of the Supreme Court, in foreclosure, under the direction, respectively, of Messrs. R. C. Benedict and N. Jarvis, Jr., referees: two lots on the south-west corner of Third-avenue and One Hundred and Third-street, together forming a plot in size 50 6/8 by 102.6, sold subject to a mortgage of $10,000, with interest from Oct. 15, 1871, for $6,000 additional. Total price, $13,750; purchaser, Wm. A. Blanchon, the owner of a second mortgage on the premises. One lot, 25.3 by 102.6, on the west side of Third-avenue, 25.1 feet south of One Hundred and Third-street, adjoining above, sold over and above mortgages, with interest, amounting to $9,170, for $3,800. Total price, $6,970; purchaser, Ma. Blanchon. One lot 25 by 75, with four-story brick dwelling and tenement thereon, situate on the south-west corner of First-avenue and One Hundred and Tenth-street, sold subject to mortgages of $8,500, with interest from January 1, 1872, for $9,200; agent-rate $12,225; purchaser, Samuel Phillips, plaintiff in the legal action. Two lots, each same size as above, with similar buildings thereon, situate on the west side of First-avenue, 25 feet south of One Hundred and Tenth-street, adjoining above, each sold subject to mortgage of $7,000 with interest from Jan. 1, 1872, for $1,700 and $1,600 respectively; total, $9,000 and $10,300; purchaser, Mr. Phillips—same as above. No other business was transacted. In regard to the Sheriff's sale held yesterday at City Hall, no reports have been received; but as at these auctions only an interest in the property is generally sold, or the form of sale from the nature of the case, it is difficult to find a record of the same as a criterion of values in no particular case. Concerning the suburban sale held yesterday at Bayonne City, N. J., by Jere. Johnson, Jr., and J. M. Gibson, particulars will be given to-morrow.

Today, at the Exchange, at public auction, Wm. Abbott will offer for sale the brick house and lot known as No. 16 Avenue D, also the leasehold premises known as Nos. 24 and 26 Catharine-street, embracing a lot 27 by 102, with three-story building thereon. At Newburgh, N. J., Dunellen Station Central Railroad, also upon the premises, at 3 o'clock, A. D. Mellick, Jr., & Bro., will offer at auction, by order of trustees, a desirable cottage residence, together with one acre of cultivated land. No other sales are expected to occur.

At private sale, Wm. H. Rayner, No. 416 Pine-street, reports having sold twenty-eight lots, commencing at a point on the northerly boundary line of the property owned and occupied by the New-York Institution for the Blind, distant 320 feet west from Broadway, for $1,850 per lot, a total of $52,000. Mr. Jackson, Nos. 11 Pine-street, and No. 320 Fifth-avenue, also report having recently sold together, four full sized lots on the south side of West Eighty-fourth-street, 275 feet east of Ninth-avenue, for $21,000 cash. The leasehold property No. 9 West Fifteenth-street, reported on Saturday, sold by A. E. Lindly & Co., for $14,500, was offered for $20,000, the price being inadvertently omitted in the report by us received.

RELIEF FOR BOSTON.

Meeting of Merchants and Bankers in the Chamber of Commerce—The Produce Exchange—Contributions Lotteries, and Other Movements.

In answer to a call signed by the leading merchants of the City, a meeting was held yesterday at the Chamber of Commerce to give expression to the sympathy of the mercantile community of New-York with the sufferers by the recent terrible fire in Boston, and to take such action in the matter as may be deemed advisable. Among those present were: William E. Dodge, William M. Fogg, Josiah D. Low, George Opdyke, A. A. Low, Samuel D. Babcock, Henry Clews, S. B. Chittenden, William H. Vermilye, William Butler Duncan, Abram S. Hewitt, Jonathan Sturges, J. Pierpont Morgan, Royal Phelps, E. F. Fabbri, Wm. H. Guion, Jackson S. Schultz, R. Warren Weston, Benjamin G. Arnold, Charles E. Bembe, Frederick S. Winston, E. A. Lambert, Paul N. Spofford, Nathan Chandler, Wm. Schigman, Anson Phelps Stokes, Oliver Hoyt, Charles Malik, B. L. Solomon, Lewis Roberts, and Alexander Formon. The meeting was called to order by Mr. Wm. H. Guion, who nominated Wm. E. Dodge as Chairman, and William M. Fiske and George Wilson as secretaries.

The Chairman said that the meeting had been called together by the mercantile community of New-York to offer their sympathy to their sister City of Boston in the appalling calamity which had just befallen her. But a little while since they had come together for a similar object in connection with another city, and now they had met to see what could be done for a city so closely connected with New-York by ties of commerce as Boston was.

Mr. A. A. Low said that when a little over a year ago they were called together to take measures for the relief of those burnt out in Chicago, none were more active in the good work than those men whom he now saw recorded in the papers among the list of sufferers. When he was acting as Treasurer of the Chicago Relief Fund he received from a prominent dry goods house, in one day, the sum of $96,000, which had been collected among those very men. It was needless for him to more than mention the dreadful calamity in Boston, as it had been already graphically recorded in the newspapers in all its terrible reality. He hoped to propose the following resolutions:

Whereas, Our sister City of Boston has just suffered from a calamity that has received no parallel in the history of our country; a large section, embracing within its limits the most costly structures, having been devastated by fire and their stores of merchandise rendered a prey to the flames; and,

Whereas, By this instantaneous destruction of the most substantial granite buildings and the burning of such valuable contents, losses of untold magnitude have been inflicted upon a large number of citizens, all everywhere known for their energy, industry, their loyalty, and their benevolence; and,

Whereas, Communities, in our day, are bound together by mutual ties of interest and affection; and,

Resolved, That it becomes this mercantile community promptly to tender to the merchants of Boston, and to all the sufferers by the devastating fire of yesterday, the expression of our deep and hearty sympathy, and to proffer such generous co-operation in measures of relief as the circumstances of the case and the urgency of the time demand.

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to consider what measures, if any, it behooves this community to adopt, in order to relieve the pecuniary disasters which are likely to result from the sudden destruction of the property, books and papers of hundreds of mercantile firms.

The Chairman said that whatever was done by them should be done promptly. At present what was most wanted was to support and sustain those in trouble. He well remembered the scenes in this City after the fire of 1835. He should never forget working all through that terrible night in 1835, and going down after day-break to Pearl-street below Wall. There he saw one of New-York's now most venerable citizens, Col. James Lee, covered over with soot and dirt, who was, with the assistance of twenty Irishmen, digging for his safe. He (the Chairman) offered him his sympathy and aid and the Colonel replied, "Dodge, thank God, my wife and children are safe; these hands can support them still." This was the kind of sympathy the merchants of Boston now needed to sustain them in their trial. The question was "what could be done?" Fortunately there would not be so much personal suffering in Boston as characterized the fire in Chicago; but there were a very large class of employes thrown out of work, and a portion of the locality where the merchants of Boston lived had been burnt out. The merchants of Boston were now in want of aid, and the merchants of this City should do all in their power to help them. After the fire in New-York the merchants of Boston had materially aided those who were burnt out in New-York. One of the large insurance companies in this City had already announced that they would pay out at once all the funds they possibly could, to succor and relieve the strain on the merchants of Boston.

Mr. Low said that it had been seen both in Chicago and Boston, that the fires had gone beyond the control of the Fire Department, and that buildings had to be removed to stay the progress of the element. It had been stated in the papers that in ten or fifteen minutes one of the largest business sections of Boston was in flames and absolutely beyond the power of the Fire Department. The same thing might occur in any city having buildings 100 feet in length, five or six stories in height, and surrounded by something as inflammable as a stable. He submitted the following resolutions on the subject:

Whereas, the recent destruction by fire of a large and valuable portion of the City of Boston reveals to the least reflecting the peril to great cities of large and lofty buildings, surrounded by the modern tin and roof, or other construction equally inflammable; and

Whereas, it has been demonstrated that our firemen, with all their improved modern apparatus assisted by steam, are totally unable to cope with fires that have once gathered head in a house of great height, covered with tin or metal, exposed in front and side and rear to other buildings of similar height construction; and in two remarkable instances it has been ascertained, as a dernier resort, it was necessary to blow up more or less buildings in order to arrest the progress of the flames; now, therefore,

Resolved, That a committee of ten, composed of members of our fire insurance companies, be appointed to recommend proper measures to secure the early establishment of a Board of Engineers, who shall be invested with legal authority to enter upon, take possession of, and blow up any buildings that, in the path of the devouring element, shall, in the judgment of the Fire Department, the fire shall have passed beyond the control of his Department, and that the head of such Board of Engineers be empowered with the means required for the timely and effectual prosecution of this contemplated work.

Commodore J. P. Le Roy proposed an amendment to the resolution requesting the authorities to take measures for the introduction of salt water to be used in case of fire. Auxiliary engines could be placed on the wharves, and the whole thing could be done for $10,000,000. New-York was surrounded by water, but there was no more in the City than had been in Boston at the time of the fire.

Mr. S. B. Chittenden thought that the subject of Mr. Low's resolutions was the most important that had been presented since the war. Every merchant believed that a great fire in New-York, such as had taken place in Boston, would impoverish the City and totally break down the system of fire insurance. After the New-York fire of 1835, the insurance companies objected to underwriting buildings which were over a certain height, and several buildings had to be reduced in height in order to be insured. If they had buildings seven stories high, which would seem to predict for this City a fire more disastrous than those of Boston or Chicago. The people of this City ought to be asked whether they would permit the erection of Mansard roofs, which, in case of fire, would ruin destruction around.

The resolutions were then unanimously adopted, and the following Committee appointed by the Chairman: Wm. E. Dodge, A. A. Low, F. S. Winston, W. E. Onion, E. R. Olcott, George Opdyke, J. Pierpont Morgan, James Slade, Jacob Wendell and S. B. Chittenden. Commodore Le Roy's suggestion on the introduction of salt water was referred to the Committee.

A communication was received from the Erie Railroad Company stating that they would convey, free of charge, all contributions for the Boston sufferers.

Mr. Watson S. Sanford announced that he was prepared to send on twenty-five cooking-stoves to the sufferers, and Dr. Paul Hoffman offered his services as a lecturer during the present week, for the benefit of the homeless.

The meeting then adjourned.

Other Movements of Relief.

Among the Movements afoot to aid the sufferers by the Boston fire, that of the young Hungarian artist Maurice Neville, who, first of his profession, proposed to deliver a lecture on American scenes and Indian war-dances at the Cooper Institute. Mr. Neville has been giving similar entertainments in some of our collegiate institutes, with great success. He is from the Court Theatre, in Vienna.

We have received $50 from S. ara Brothers, No. 46 William-street, for the relief of Boston sufferers. The money will be forwarded as soon as we ascertain the parties designated by that city to receive it.

NEWARK'S SYMPATHY FOR BOSTON.

In pursuance of a call signed by Mayor Ricardo, the citizens of Newark held a meeting at the Common Council Chamber, in the City Hall, last evening, to consult upon the subject of giving assistance to Boston. Mayor Ricard presided. A series of resolutions was adopted, tendering to the merchants and other sufferers by the Boston fire, any assistance within the reach of the city and people of Newark that may be needed.

The Board of Trade also held a meeting, and adopted similar resolutions.

Resolutions Passed by the Brooklyn Board of Aldermen.

The great calamity that has befallen the City of Boston is the all-absorbing topic of conversation among the citizens of Brooklyn as elsewhere. The Board of Aldermen, at a regular meeting yesterday, took appropriate action on the matter.

Alderman Ropes offered the following:

Resolved, That the Mayor be, and he is hereby, requested to communicate immediately with the Mayor of Boston, extending to his citizens through him assurances of sympathies of the citizens of Brooklyn, because of the great calamity which has fallen upon them, and rendering such material aid as it may be in the power of Brooklyn to render.

Resolved, That a Committee of three be appointed from this Board to act in connection with the Mayor in reference to any reply that may be received to this communication.

Alderman Rogers drew a contrast between Boston and Chicago, presenting the former as being more capable of sustaining the blow than was the latter.

The resolutions were unanimously adopted.

The same gentleman then offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Board of Fire Commissioners be, and they are hereby, requested to call the citizens of Brooklyn, by proclamation or otherwise, to increased vigilance in their efforts to avert the dangers of an extensive conflagration, particularly in those portions of the City occupied by manufacturers and dealers in combustible materials.

The resolution was adopted.

Offers of Assistance from All Parts of the Country.

RALEIGH, N. C., Nov. 11.—Mayor Whitaker has called a public meeting of the citizens of Raleigh, at Metropolitan Hall, on Monday night, for the purpose of raising contributions for the sufferers from the Boston calamity.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Nov. 11.—At a large meeting of merchants and business men, Mayor Brown presiding, held this noon, resolutions were adopted, sympathizing with the people of Boston, and stating that, should it appear that material aid was necessary to alleviate the sufferings caused by the fire, the city would respond in a substantial manner.

CINCINNATI, Nov. 11.—The interest here this morning, concerning the Boston fire, is unabated. The papers are all issuing extras, which are eagerly sought for. The public mind is now more turned to the financial aspect of the calamity. The banks generally are pursuing a conservative course. They are accommodating their customers, but there seems to be a general disposition among them to act carefully until they can more accurately weigh the probable consequences of the disaster.

The Chamber of Commerce has adopted resolutions requesting the City Council to extend relief to the Boston sufferers.

CHICAGO, Ill., Nov. 11.—The excitement over the Boston fire, which had partially subsided upon the advices of yesterday, that it was limited, was received this morning by the report that it had broken out again, and received by a dispatch from Boston, dated noon today, contradicting the alarming report. All the morning papers have editorials on the subject, expressing unbounded sympathy for the suffering city, whose ready, boundless kindness toward this community under similar affliction is so fresh in the minds of our citizens.

The Inter Ocean calls upon the Secretary of the Treasury to increase the volume of currency, saying if currency is not made more elastic, the effect of our present financial stringency will extend to every corner of the land, and cause disaster to thousands of persons engaged in trade and industry.

The Times calls upon merchants owing notes in Boston to pay at once, without waiting for them to come due, and expresses a confident belief that the pluck of Boston will insure a speedy restoration of all she lost.

The Tribune, speaking in reference to the financial effects, thinks there is no reason intrinsically why the disaster should cause a monetary crisis.

AT a meeting of citizens at the Hall of the Board of Trade, at 1½ o'clock P. M. today, presided over by Mayor Medill, short speeches of sympathy for the sufferers of the Boston fire were made, and $100,000 donated for their relief. Rev. Robert Collyer, N. K. Fairbank, and Dr. E. W. Johnson, were appointed a committee to convey the money to Boston, and they will start this evening.

DETROIT, Mich., Nov. 11.—Mayor Moffat called a public meeting this morning, at which a resolution was passed expressing sympathy for the sufferers by the Boston fire, and offering material aid as soon as it is ascertained that it is needed, and will be acceptable.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 11.—A meeting of citizens was held today to adopt measures for the relief of the sufferers by the Boston fire. A committee was appointed to confer with the Mayor of Boston and ascertain the amount of suffering existing among the poorer classes, and the best means of alleviating the same.

ALBANY, Nov. 11.—The Boston fire has caused much sympathy here, and the hope that the General Government will afford all the relief it possibly can, is generally expressed.

BALTIMORE, Md., Nov. 11.—Mayor Van Zant has called a meeting of the citizens of Baltimore for to-morrow afternoon, at the Corn and Flour Exchange, to take such action as deemed proper to aid the sufferers by the Boston fire.
